cessity for such action.²⁰

To the extent that a conflict appears in the cases on the question of power to revoke a permit after work has been commenced, it has been said that the cases appear to turn on the degree of construction completed at the time the revocation is attempted, it being suggested that the weight of authority would support the rule that, if work was no more than barely begun, the permit is subject to revocation, but it cannot be revoked if a substantial part of the work has been performed.²¹

Some authorities have held that a permittee cannot acquire a vested right against the police power of the state or municipality,²² but even under this view it is held that, if the municipality has no power to regulate the construction of buildings existing at the time of the enactment of an ordinance, such ordinance cannot nullify or authorize the revocation of a permit for a building already constructed.²³

Estoppel. In some cases it is held that the local authority which issued the permit is estopped to revoke it where the permittee has commenced to operate or incurred substantial expense;²⁴ and, conversely, it is also held that the permit may be revoked where the elements of equitable estoppel are not present,²⁵ as where the permittees had notice before they commenced operations that the people disapproved of the permit and an election was held

Fraud held not shown

(1) Where township committee and building inspector had possession of revised map, distinctly showing number of apartments in proposed garden apartment buildings, when committee amended township zoning ordinance to permit erection of buildings and inspector issued permit, such permit will not be revoked on ground that builders palmed off revised map in place of earlier map showing fewer apartments without township officials being conscious of change.

for the purpose of defeating it.²⁶ So, a city is not estopped to revoke a permit which was obtained by deception of the applicant who expended money in converting a building in alleged reliance on the permit, since it was not the applicant who was misled, but the city;²⁷ and a letter written to the city council by the city attorney with respect to the questionable validity of a petition requesting amendment of the zoning ordinance to prohibit an owner from building a store on his property and continuing suspension of the owner's building permit does not estop the city further to interfere with the owner's building plans.²⁸

Necessity for objection by aggrieved party. Where, in the absence of any fraud or deceit on the part of the permittee, a permit for the construction or use of a building has been issued under circumstances in which the issuance of such a permit was improper although seemingly reasonably debatable, such permit will not be revoked where construction has proceeded or money has been expended on the faith of the permit and no appeal from its issuance was taken by aggrieved parties.²⁹

The vitiation of a contract between the municipality and the permittee has been held not to affect the rights of the permittee under his permit.³⁰

§ 245. — Grounds

Where an ordinance or regulation or the permit itself provides for revocation under certain circumstances, the necessary circumstances or causes must be shown to exist in order to warrant revocation.

but, if such circumstances are shown to exist, the permit may properly be revoked.³² Under some ordinances or acts a zoning permit may be revoked if operations thereunder are not commenced within a specified time,³³ and under others, a building inspector or administrative officer may prohibit a permittee from proceeding under a permit until he receives proper assurances that the work will be done in accordance with the laws and ordinances.³⁴ Zoning enactments and regulations specifying the conditions under which a permit may not be revoked after a change in the zoning regulations are controlling.³⁵

A permit may ordinarily be revoked if the permittee fails to comply with reasonable terms or conditions expressed in the permit,³⁶ or if the work is not performed in conformity with the statement, plans, or specifications on which the permit is issued,³⁷ at least where the departure from plans on which the permit was granted involves an extension of a nonconforming use for which no variance has been sought or granted.³⁸ A permit may be revoked for misrepresentation as to a material fact in the application on which the permit was based.³⁹ So, a permit should be vacated where it does not contain the limitations and restrictions specified by the zoning board in granting the variance under which the permit was issued.⁴⁰

A building permit validly issued in conformity with the zoning laws may not be revoked on the ground that the activity to be conducted therein will constitute a nuisance.⁴¹ The inadequacy of facilities presently available in a neighborhood will not authorize the revocation of a permit otherwise permissible under the zoning laws.⁴²

A permit may be revoked or nullified where it was illegally issued, as where it was unauthorized, or violates or does not comply with, or conform to, the zoning laws,⁴³ or where it was issued under a mistake of fact.⁴⁴ This rule applies where the permittee has not changed his position in reliance on the permit,⁴⁵ or has expended only small amounts in

Oil tanks

Under zoning ordinance inhibiting erection of oil tanks constituting increased fire hazard over previous nonconforming use, board of adjust-

larly applicable where work by the permittee was commenced pending an appeal from the grant of the permit⁵² or continued after issuance of a stop order.⁵³

It has been held, however, that the validity of a permit cannot be contested, even though it was erroneously issued, where the zoning map was not available to the permittee and he has made substantial expenditures in reliance on the permit.⁵⁴

Modification. A permit illegally or improperly granted may ordinarily be modified.⁵⁵ Moreover, a building inspector has no power to revoke a permit to occupy a factory building for use as a tannery in compliance with the zoning ordinance on the ground that the conduct of such business therein would violate the city sanitary code, the provisions of which have no precedence over those of the zoning ordinance.⁵⁶

§ 247. — Who May Revoke

Municipal or other authorities vested with the power to grant or deny permits generally have the power to revoke them.

Apart from the question of the right to exercise it in a particular case, as a general rule the discretionary power of municipal or other authorities with respect to granting and denying permits includes the power to revoke;⁵⁷ and the power may be impliedly conferred on a particular official by an ordinance providing that the board of zoning appeals should decide appeals from the refusal, granting, or revocation of permits by such official.⁵⁸

Where a permit has been properly issued by an administrative official for a use permitted under the zoning laws or ordinances, and all prerequisites have been fully met, and no complaints made or an appeal requested, a zoning board or commission authorized to review his rulings is not authorized to revoke the permit.⁵⁹

§ 248. — Procedure

In determining whether or not a permit should be revoked, the authorities act in a quasi-judicial capacity; and they should act with reasonable promptness, and only on a hearing after due notice.

In determining whether or not a permit should be revoked, the authorities act in a quasi-judicial capacity.⁶⁰ Such action should be taken with reasonable promptness,⁶¹ and only on a hearing⁶² after due notice⁶³ and on evidence substantially supporting the decision.⁶⁴ Failure to proceed against other violators of a zoning ordinance is no defense to a proceeding for revocation of a building permit.⁶⁵

§ 249. — — — Change in Zoning Regulations

A permit cannot be revoked by ordinance where the charter of the municipality exclusively vests the power elsewhere; but in a proper case permits under the zoning laws may be specifically or in effect revoked by subsequent changes of law or ordinances.

A permit cannot be revoked by ordinance where

B. PERMITS AND CERTIFICATES FOR GARAGES, FILLING STATIONS, AND PARKING LOTS

§ 250. Requirement

Although such permits or certificates are not necessary in the absence of statutes or ordinances requiring them, municipal corporations in the proper exercise of their police power may make the acquisition of a permit or certificate a prerequisite to the construction, alteration, or operation of service stations, garages, or parking lots in specified areas.

Generally speaking, a building or other structure may be erected, altered, or used for the operation of the charter of the municipality exclusively vests the power elsewhere,⁶⁷ but in a proper case, permits under the zoning laws may be specifically or in effect revoked by subsequent changes of law or ordinances.⁶⁸ A permit or certificate has been held not ipso facto revoked or rendered inoperative by the subsequent adoption of a zoning law or ordinance, not expressly providing for its revocation, under which it would not be authorized;⁶⁹ and once the permittee's rights have vested, the adoption of an ordinance under which the permit would not be authorized does not ipso facto revoke the permit or render it inoperative.⁷⁰ It has been held, however, that the adoption of a zoning ordinance ipso facto revokes a permit where the permittee had not incurred liabilities or expenses thereunder.⁷¹

§ 251. Effect of Change of Regulations on Pending Application

Where after the making of an application for a permit to construct a garage or filling station, but before a decision thereon, the regulations are changed, the application is governed by the regulations as changed; but if the decision on the application is deliberately delayed while the regulation is amended to bar the construction, applicant is entitled to the permit.

Where after the making of an application for a permit to construct or alter a garage or filling station, but before a decision thereon, the regulations are changed, applicant's request for a permit thereafter is governed by the regulations as changed,⁷⁹ and the same rule has been applied where the ordinance was enacted after denial of the application but before decision on review.⁸⁰ The rule is especially applicable where the application is made after publication of the required notice prior to adoption of the ordinance.⁸¹ Where the decision on the application is deliberately delayed, however, while the zoning ordinance is amended to bar such construction, applicant is entitled to the permit,⁸² at least where the amendment is invalid as having no relation to the public health, safety, or morals.⁸³

"Districts" construed as "areas"

Paragraph of zoning ordinance that zoning board of review might, on application and after public notice and hearing, and subject to such conditions and safeguards as board should deem necessary in public interest, authorize erection of a filling station in certain "districts" would be construed as though word "areas" was used instead of word "districts" when necessary, in order to avoid an absurd result.

Factors considered but not controlling

(1) On application to town board for permit to construct a filling station, consideration of existence of other filling stations in neighborhood adequate to serve needs of the traveling public was a proper exercise of discretion by the board.

erty to a well-considered plan of community growth as embodied in the zoning ordinances.⁹⁸

If applicant meets all the requirements of the regulations and there is no valid ground for denial of the application, the board or official in charge may grant the permit,⁹⁹ and the board or official in

Amendment of application

An amendment to an application for permit to install additional gasoline tanks and pumps at existing gasoline station so as to provide for inbefore any action on the application may be taken under some provisions the premises must be posted,¹¹ and the data must be submitted to various administrative officers, such as the commissioners of fire, health, police, and other municipal departments, for investigation and report.¹²

§ 255. — Approval of, or Consent to, Erection, Alteration, or Use of Property

Under some zoning acts or ordinances garages and filling stations are permitted only if the application is approved by the board of adjustment.

Under the express provisions of some zoning acts or ordinances a public or commercial garage or repair shop, or gas and oil service stations, are permitted if, and only if, the application is approved by the board of adjustment.¹³ Under such provisions, the fact that the zoning official notes that the zoning is approved merely indicates that a service station can be erected in the zone if the board of adjustment approves such use and issues a certificate.¹⁴ Applications of this sort are hybrid in nature; the board takes original jurisdiction, and it is the practice for the zoning official to refer all such applications automatically to the board of adjustment.¹⁵ The failure of the board to issue either a certificate of exception or a certificate of variance does not constitute a reversal under all the circumstances of the order, decision, or determination of the administrative officer,¹⁶ and the matter is, therefore, not governed by a further provision for the concurring vote of four members of the board to reverse any order or to decide in favor of the applicant on any matter on which it is required to pass under the ordinance or to effect any variation.¹⁷

§ 256. — — — Adjacent Property Owners

Where zoning regulations so provide, the consent of a stated percentage of adjacent property owners is required as a condition to the construction of, or use of property for, a service station or garage; but under some provisions the board has the power to consider an application on the merits although the consents of adjoining owners were not obtained, where practical difficulties and unnecessary hardships exist.

Where required by applicable zoning regulations, the consent of a stated percentage of adjacent property owners must be obtained as a condition to the construction of, or use of property for, a service station or garage or as a condition to the granting of a permit therefor;¹⁸ but under some provisions stallation of a new gasoline station had the practical effect of a new application and the amended application would be required to be submitted by the board of zoning appeals to city officials designated by ordinance for investigation and report, notwithstanding the original application had been so submitted and approved. Conclusiveness of reports

Wash.—Chief Petroleum Corporation v. City of Walla Walla, 116 P.2d 560, 10 Wash.2d 297.

Purpose of zoning ordinance providing that no permit shall be issued for construction of gasoline filling station unless, with application, is filed written consent of majority of property owners whose holdings front on same street within a certain distance of proposed structure, in which case permit may be granted on approval of board of appeals, was to empower neighboring lot owners to determine whether there would be a hearing on an application for permit. N.Y.—Sena v. Gallagher, 170 N.Y.S.2d 953.

Amendatory ordinance

Where application for permit to build gasoline service station was filed while ordinance provided that gasoline service station might be established with consent of owners of majority of all property within one hundred feet of proposed structure, fact that, while appeal from decision of board of adjustment of borough

it has been held that the board has power and jurisdiction to consider an application on the merits although the consents of adjoining owners were not obtained,¹⁹ where practical difficulties and unnecessary hardships exist.²⁰ Technical defects in the form in which consents are procured will not prevent the issuance of a permit.²¹

Under an ordinance requiring consents of owners of a stated percentage of the frontage of the "affected area," and imposing on the board of appeals the duty of stating the extent of the area to be affected by the proposed structure, the board in making such determination acts in a quasi-judicial capacity and must not act arbitrarily or unreasonably.²² Thus, it may not act arbitrarily in the exclusion of particular property as not affected by the proposed structure and in regarding it as property the owners of which need not consent.²³

Where the consent of a majority of the property owners is required by ordinance to the erection of a public garage, where two thirds of the buildings within a specified radius are used exclusively for residence purposes, it has been held that buildings used as barns and private garages on lots occupied as residences used in connection with the residences are to be counted as buildings.²⁴

The fact that an owner of the property situated within the required distance of the proposed main building of the gasoline station is the record owner of the tract of land from which the property of the applicant for the gas station was obtained does not disqualify him from giving consent.²⁵

Revocation of consents. Consents when given may be revoked at any time before they are acted on.²⁶

§ 257. — Notice, Hearing, and Evidence

Proper notice of all hearings on an application for a permit for the construction of, or use of property for, a garage, filling station, or parking lot must be given, and the hearing or hearings must be held publicly.

Proper and sufficient notice of all hearings before the board on an application for a permit or certificate of approval for the construction of, or use of property for, a garage, filling station, or parking lot must be given to the public generally,²⁷ and, was pending in county court, the borough amended ordinance to require application for building permit to be accompanied by a written consent of owners of eighty per cent of all property within one hundred and ten feet of deed line of property in question did not preclude issuance of permit under ordinance in effect at time application was filed; amendment was not an effort to improve community by upgrading land use, but rather was an enactment which increased power and domination of neighboring landowners over particular piece of land.

R.I.—Radick v. Zoning Bd. of Review of the Town of East Providence, 117 A.2d 84.

Notice held not defective

Notice and petition by bus company, which petitioned town's board of appeals for a special permit, under town's zoning ordinance for construction of a garage, was not defective because board authorized erection of a garage to be used for storage of busses, and for light repair, on ground that authorization enlarged the scope of petition and notice, since fact that petitioner was a bus company was notice to neighboring landowners that proposed garage would be a sizable garage; and notice was not defective because clerk of board, rather than the board itself as provided in zoning bylaw, sent notices to interested parties.

likewise, such proper and sufficient notice must be given to applicant.²⁸ It has been held, however, that where a certificate of restrictions against the use of property for a filling station made by the owner when his property was removed from residential to business use was intended to supplement an agreement with the village board and was not intended to constitute an enforceable agreement with the surrounding property owners, the board could cancel the restrictions and grant a permit for a gasoline station without giving notice to the surrounding property owners.²⁹

A hearing or hearings must be held³⁰ publicly,³¹ although the deliberations of the board may be in private.³² Expert testimony is not necessary.³³

Rehearing; waiver of objections. The appearance before the zoning board of property owners objecting to the granting of a permit for the use of property for off-street parking, and their exhaustive participation in a rehearing on the merits, and submission of written information thereafter, constitute a waiver on their part of any objection that they might have otherwise interposed on the ground that the applicant did not comply with the rules and regulations governing rehearings of applications for permits.³⁴

§ 258. — Determination

Necessity of hearing evidence

(1) Failure to hear evidence before granting permit for garage was immaterial where issue involved only application of zoning ordinance.

N.J.—Newark Athletic Club v. Board of Adjustment of Newark, 144 A. 167, 7 N.J.Misc. 55.

(2) However, under ordinance enjoining board of adjustment to hear an application for a permit to erect a filling station or public garage the same as it is empowered to hear cases and make exceptions to a zoning ordinance, board was required to determine on legal evidence whether proposed use of land for a filling station or garage was inimical to the public safety and general welfare, and hence granting of permit by board was invalid where no witnesses were sworn, and no testimony was taken, even though action was approved by township committee.

N.J.—Schnell v. Township Committee of Ocean Tp., 198 A. 759, 120 N.J. Law 194.

Admissibility of evidence

On an administrative hearing with respect to permitting the erection of a gasoline station, fact that letter opposing the grant of the application from the capital planning commission was apparently based on hearsay and that neither its writer nor the member of the staff who made the investigation was present for cross-examination did not affect the admissibility of the letter, as would be case at a trial before the judicial tribunal.

rest solely on what amounts to nothing more than the personal view of the board members,³⁶ although, in the absence of any provision to the contrary, the board may regard any facts learned by its members through personal observation to the same extent as though such facts had been offered in evidence.³⁷ Moreover, the board is not bound to adopt the opinion of the traffic engineer stating that traffic conditions in vicinity are such that the operation of the station would not create an unusual or undue hazard.³⁸

The action of the board must be taken at a proper meeting with a sufficient number of members present and voting.³⁹ In the absence of a provision so requiring, the board in passing on an application for a service station or garage permit need not make formal findings of the facts on which its action is based,⁴⁰ but under some zoning regulations it has been held that the board must make a finding that in its judgment the issuance of a permit will not be detrimental to the welfare of the community, and is reasonably necessary,⁴¹ at least where the board acts as an advisory body.⁴² Under some provisions, findings by the board are required only in so far as they embrace facts known to the members of the board which do not appear in the evidence.⁴³ Refusal of a permit does not amount to a taking of property but is merely the denial of a favor.⁴⁴

The board may not ordinarily reconsider its decision in the absence of fraud or mistake unless there has been a change of conditions affecting the right to a permit, and it is not concluded by a prior decision which has been set aside or which was decided on different grounds.

§ 260. Requisites, Validity, Operation, and Effect of Permit

A garage permit may, in the absence of a statute or regulation to the contrary, be signed by means of a

A garage permit may, in the absence of a statute or regulation to the contrary, be signed by means of a rubber stamp.⁵¹ A permit for the storage of automobiles on the same lot on which a tenement house or hotel is located may be issued when authorized by ordinance.⁵² A certificate of approval of a location as a site for a gasoline station pertains to the suitability of the location from which the gasoline is to be sold, and not to the person or persons who propose to sell it.⁵³

Where a petition to use lots as a parking space is granted, prima facie any necessity for pursuing further the matter of rezoning is superseded in so far as the use of the lots as a parking space is concerned.⁵⁴ Where a permit expires by its own limitation it is not susceptible of extension or renewal

Use for sale of gasoline

Under municipal ordinance providing that board of zoning appeals shall not consider or approve an application for a permit within two years after rejection of an application for a similar "permit" for same premises, as applied to applications for gasoline stations, quoted word comprehends use of premises for sale of gasoline.

Changes held insufficient to justify board of appeals in reversing its decisions denying permit.

Conn.—Burr v. Rago, supra.

New application

If there has been change in physical condition since appeal from denial of application for permit to construct garage, new application should be filed with building inspector.

Absence of majority

Where zoning board's determination that application for permit to erect gasoline station was invalid because there had not been a majority vote of board for granting permit, fact that board had new member in place of one who resigned after determination would not prevent reconsideration of matter.

N.Y.—Gollob v. Bevans, 161 N.Y.S.2d 225, 5 Misc.2d 958.

Effect of action to get aside

Owner's court action to have order of city authorities denying building permit to repair garage declared unreasonable did not preclude subsequent application.

48. Conn.—Dadukian v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of City of Bridgeport, 68 A.2d 123, 135 Conn. 706.

Detrimental effects not previously apparent

City zoning board of appeal's denial of certificate of approval of gasoline station location on application made therefor some eighteen years after board's approval of same location for such use was not precluded by principle that administrative tribunal should not ordinarily be permitted to review its own decisions and revoke action once taken by it, since effect of such use on traffic safety and fire hazards might not have been apparent at time of previous approval.

Held not criterion of issue

Detriment to lot owner individually because of his inability to resume gasoline station business on lot is not criterion for determining issue whether city zoning board of appeals acted beyond its powers in refusing approval of such location for station on application made some eighteen years after board's approval of location for such use.

"Located"

(1) "Located," within the meaning of a provision authorizing the issuance of a permit for the storage of automobiles on the same lot on which a tenement house or hotel is located, means a tenement house or hotel which is either in existence at the time of the application or has been designated and assigned to occupy a certain plot absolutely by one not a stranger to the title.

after its expiration, and when a second permit for the same purpose is issued which makes no mention of its being an extension or renewal of the first, the second permit may not be regarded as an extension or renewal of the first permit.⁵⁵

Illegal or unauthorized permit. A property owner is charged with notice of the illegality of a permit issued to him after the enactment of a zoning ordinance prohibiting erection of a filling station;⁵⁶ and an illegal or unauthorized filling station permit is a nullity and confers no rights on the permittee.⁵⁷

§ 261. Revocation or Nullification

A permit for the construction, alteration, or use of property for a service station or garage is subject to revocation where the permittee has not acted on the faith of the permit and has no vested rights thereunder.

A permit obtained from a municipality for the construction, alteration, or use of property for a service station or garage is subject to revocation by the proper exercise of the police power vested in the municipality.⁵⁸ Accordingly, where the permittee has not acted on the faith of the permit and no substantial work has been done on the structure, the permittee has no vested rights and the permit may be revoked or nullified by a change in the zoning regulations.⁵⁹

After such a permit has been granted, however, and the permittee has acted on the faith of it and made contracts and incurred expenses and liabilities or completed a substantial amount of work toward the construction of the proposed structure, the permittee has a vested right,⁶⁰ and the permit cannot be revoked in the absence of fraud or deceit or other fault on the part of the permittee;⁶¹ nor can it be nullified by a change in the zoning ordinance.⁶² It is ordinarily improper to revoke a permit or certificate without notice to the owner and an opportunity for him to be heard;⁶³ but there may be instances where doing so is not illegal.⁶⁴

An illegal or unauthorized permit may be revoked,⁶⁵ at least in the absence of any circumstances working an estoppel;⁶⁶ and it has been held that it may be revoked or invalidated notwithstanding that a person may have acted on the permit.⁶⁷

C. ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW

§ 262. In General

Under some zoning laws an appeal lies to a higher board or commission from the decision of the original official or board on an application relating to a permit or certificate.

Under some zoning laws an appeal lies to a higher board or commission from the decision of the original official or board on an application relating to a permit or certificate,⁶⁸ and the power to review such a decision may be vested exclusively in the designated board.⁶⁹ Accordingly such appeal may be taken by an aggrieved party from a decision granting,⁷⁰ or denying a permit⁷¹ or may be taken by an aggrieved party from a decision revok-

"Person aggrieved"

(1) Spirit and intent of zoning combined with justice itself require that statute allowing any person aggrieved by an officer, department, board, or bureau of the village to take an appeal to the board of appeals be given the broadest possible interpretation.

N.Y.—Horan v. Board of Appeals, Village of Scarsdale, 164 N.Y.S.2d 543, 6 Misc.2d 571.

(2) "Person aggrieved" under such a statute is a person directly affected by the action of the administrative official or board charged with enforcement of the ordinance.

Ind.—Fidelity Trust Co. v. Downing, 68 N.E.2d 789, 224 Ind. 457.

(3) Where appeal was taken by adjoining land owner who made no special showing of injury or damage, acceptance by zoning board of appeals of jurisdiction of appeal was not unreasonable or arbitrary.

N.Y.—Edward A. Lashins, Inc. v. Griffin, 132 N.Y.S.2d 896.

(4) On the face of it, without proof of special injury or damage, an owner of property has sufficient interest to enable him to appeal determination permitting an unauthorized zoning use of adjoining premises and is an aggrieved person entitled to appeal.

N.Y.—Edward A. Lashins, Inc. v. Griffin, supra.

(5) Persons living in homes located within five hundred feet of premises for which village building inspector had issued a building permit for erection of shopping center which allegedly would not be in compliance with zoning ordinances and would not promote the general health and welfare were "aggrieved persons" entitled to take an appeal to village board of appeals.

N.Y.—Horan v. Board of Appeals, Village of Scarsdale, supra.

(6) Action of the board in refusing to accept the appeal of the petitioners and in deciding as a matter of law and without a hearing that petitioners are not "aggrieved persons" entitled to take an appeal was arbitrary, capricious, and without legal basis.

N.Y.—Horan v. Board of Appeals, Village of Scarsdale, supra.

Treated as proceeding by city in own behalf

Even though proceeding, for review of building inspector's action in issuing permit, was instigated by complaint of private citizens, it would be treated, for purposes of determining whether it had been timely brought, as a proceeding by city in its own behalf, where objectors were not represented by counsel and did not conduct their own case, and instead city attorney conducted inquisition, calling as witnesses the building inspector, two of the objectors, the city planning superintendent and the permittee.

Effect of mayor's approval

Board of zoning appeals is authorized to entertain appeal from building engineer's granting of permit to use building for a particular purpose, notwithstanding mayor's approval of such use has been obtained as required.

Exclusiveness of remedy

The procedure prescribed by statute as the course to be followed by one whose application for a permit to alter a building has been refused must be followed to the exclusion of other remedies.

Mass.—Bellevue Hotel Co. v. Building Com'r of Boston, 12 N.E.2d 94, 299 Mass. 73.

Other remedy available to co-party Petition and appeal, from building commissioner's decision denying per-ing⁷² a permit, although in the absence of statutes authorizing the remedy, aggrieved landowners have no remedy by appeal from the action of a building commissioner in granting a permit.⁷³ It has been held that a board of appeals has no jurisdiction to review a decision which is a nullity,⁷⁴ or a determination as to matters or acts under invalid regulations.⁷⁵

Ordinarily such an appeal must be predicated on a decision of an administrative body or official on an application made to it,⁷⁶ and it has been held that an ordinance empowering a board to adopt rules necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the zoning ordinance and to review rulings of the building inspector does not invest the board, on its own motion, with appellate jurisdiction for the purpose of reviewing the legal or equitable character of the building inspector's act in allowing a building permit;⁷⁷ but where the original board, such as the department of public works, refuses to issue a permit, and informs the applicant that he must go to the board of zoning adjustment, and the applicant requests the latter to issue the permit, there is such an application to the department and such a denial of the application and such an appeal to the board as gives the board authority to act.⁷⁸

The appeal may be made only to a duly authorized board on which appellate jurisdiction has been conferred.⁷⁹ Statutes and zoning ordinances au-mit, by both fuel company and railroad, were not barred because railroad, if alone interested, might have proceeded under another statute to obtain relief from the department of public utilities.

Mass.—Marinelli v. Board of Appeal of Building Department of City of Boston, 175 N.E. 479, 275 Mass. 169.

Held reviewable decision

Where building inspector unequivocally denied application for permit on ground that construction would violate zoning ordinance, his denial and statement that variance was needed before building permit could be issued constituted a decision from which an appeal might be taken by application to village zoning board of appeals for variance.

N.Y.—Hunter v. Board of Appeals of Village of Saddle Rock, 168 N.Y.S. 2d 148, 4 A.D.2d 961.

Denial by village building inspector

Village building inspector who refused to grant building permit and certificate of occupancy was an "administrative official" within section of village law authorizing appeals to board of appeals from determination of administrative official charged with enforcement of ordinance.

N.Y.—Weiss v. Village of Lindenhurst, 144 N.Y.S.2d 228.

Refusal to entertain appeal held violation of law

In proceeding on application for permission to construct gypsum manufacturing plant in an area devoted mostly to scattered light industry and agriculture, zoning board of appeals had jurisdiction of appeal from decision of township board denying application, and refusal of board to entertain appeal was in violation of law.

N.J.—Smith v. Kearny Zoning Board of Appeals, 143 A. 151, 6 N.J.Misc. 954.

Particular boards

(1) Under building code provisions that there shall be no appeal to board of building appeals where appeal lies to zoning board of adjustments under provisions of zoning ordinance, board of adjustment had jurisdiction to review act of building commissioner in refusing to re-

thorizing the board of zoning appeals to vary or modify the terms of the ordinances in case of practical or unnecessary hardships do not render a showing or claim of undue hardship or practical difficulty a prerequisite to the board's review of a refusal of a permit.⁸⁰

Effect of appeal. Under a statute so providing, an appeal to the board or commission stays all proceedings in furtherance of the action appealed from,⁸¹ and, after an appeal is taken from the refusal to grant the permit, the permit cannot be granted until the board of appeal or adjustment has disposed of the appeal by some official act.⁸²

Withdrawal of appeal. After an appeal has been taken to the board or commission from the refusal to issue the permit, and various parties in interest have appeared and been heard, complainant cannot withdraw the appeal without the consent of the municipal corporation or the officer from whose action the appeal is taken.⁸³

Arbitration. Under some provisions an appeal from a decision of an administrative body or official may be in the form of arbitration proceedings

in the prescribed manner.⁸⁴

Laches or estoppel. Where an appeal from the issuance of a permit is taken within the time allowed therefor, reliance on the permit in the time intervening between its issuance and the taking of the appeal will not suffice to sustain a plea of estoppel,⁸⁵ nor will laches be found under the circumstances.⁸⁶ A township is not estopped to contest the jurisdiction of its board of adjustment to hear an appeal from the township building inspector's refusal to issue a certificate of occupancy for certain premises to persons without a valid building permit.⁸⁷

§ 263. Nature and Extent of Jurisdiction on Appeal

In exercising its appellate jurisdiction on review of a decision relating to a permit, the board is vested with judicial or quasi-judicial powers, and, subject to review by the courts, its decisions are final and may not be collaterally attacked.

voke alteration permit to allow residence to be converted to funeral parlor, as real issue was whether there was right to use different from that for which property was zoned, and board's revocation of alteration permit was also, in effect, revocation of occupancy permit for same use, although more appropriate procedure would have been to revoke expressly both permits.

Under town law provision that appeal to zoning board of appeals stays all proceedings in furtherance of action appealed from, the status quo is to be maintained pending appeal, and where appeal was taken from action issuing building permit, pending determination of appeal, only the issuance of the building permit and nothing else was stayed.

(2) Where village, on builder's appeal from decision of building commissioner refusing to issue building permits, took part in the selection of arbitrators as provided by village ordinance, appeared and took part in the hearing, made no objection and made no showing as to reasons that might have been urged against the issuance of permits, in absence of fraud, village and building commissioner were estopped to deny authority of arbitrators and justness of award.

and, subject to review by the courts, discussed infra § 328, its decisions are final⁸⁹ and may not be collaterally attacked.⁹⁰

Under some provisions the function of the board is limited to consideration of applications, exceptions, and variances on appeal from decisions of the building inspector,⁹¹ and the board is limited to determination of whether the officer whose decision is appealed from applied the zoning ordinance correctly.⁹² Under other provisions the board is under no restrictions in its consideration of the matter;⁹³ it is not limited to a determination of whether the ordinances regulating the permit procedure have been complied with,⁹⁴ but is given all the powers of the officers from whom the appeal is taken,⁹⁵ and has jurisdiction to hear the entire controversy⁹⁶ de novo,⁹⁷ and to draw its own conclusions from conflicting evidence before it.⁹⁸ So it has been said that an application to the board of appeals on appeal from an order of an administrative officer refusing a building permit as contrary to the zoning resolution is not strictly an appeal, although it is so designated,⁹⁹ but presents a matter within the original jurisdiction of the board to vary the resolution,¹ and that the board has jurisdiction to treat the case as an application for a variance.²

The board deals strictly with zoning, which determines how an owner can use or not use his land,³ and has no authority to construe the state corporation law,⁴ or the municipal building code,⁵ or to deal with a refusal to issue a certificate of occupancy where the refusal was not predicated on an infraction of the zoning law, but was occasioned by noncompliance with the requirements as to subdivision, namely, lack of proper street facilities.⁶ Moreover it has no power to pass on the validity or invalidity of ordinances.⁷

§ 264. Procedure

The procedure prescribed by statute for an appeal to a reviewing board from the decision of an administrative officer relating to permits or certificates is exclusive, and there must be substantial compliance with the rules governing the time and manner of taking the appeal.

Considerations affecting judgment

Board was bound to give due heed to all public considerations and private interests in passing upon appeal from action of central permit bureau in issuing building permits for defense housing project in first class residential district.

Cal.—Lindell Co. v. Board of Permit Appeals of City and County of San Francisco, 144 P.2d 4, 23 C.2d 303.

Overruling error of judgment

Zoning board of appeals may properly overrule an error of judgment of the building inspector in failing to

tion as should be made.²⁷ An appeal may be dismissed in a proper case,²⁸ as where it was not taken in time.²⁹

The board may order the issuance of a permit on condition that the applicant perform specified acts;³⁰ and on appeal from the granting of a permit, it may in a proper case revoke the permit³¹ or impose conditions conforming to the ordinances.³² It has been held, however, that the board does not issue permits; that is done by the original official after the board has decided any contest.³³ The action of the board in granting a permit in violation of requirements of an ordinance is improper.³⁴ Where no greater powers are conferred, the board, sitting as an appeal body to review the decision of an administrative body or official, may do only what such body or official might have done in the first place.³⁵

Time for rendering decision. The time within which the board may or must render its decision on appeal may be regulated by statute.³⁶ Thus the board may be required to decide the matter within a reasonable time;³⁷ and, where this is the case, the board cannot indefinitely table the appeal.³⁸

§ 267. Reconsideration of Decision

The board may in a proper case grant a rehearing, but in the absence of statutory authorization it may not reopen the matter and rehear it on the same facts.

Under appropriate provision therefor, the board may in a proper case grant a rehearing³⁹ pursuant to a timely application setting forth proper grounds,⁴⁰ such as newly discovered evidence tend-refer to the town board a request involving an operation which might produce noise, vibrations and noxious fumes.

N.Y.—J. L. Hennessy Associates, Inc. v. Griffin, 155 N.Y.S.2d 378.

Appeal to governing body

With respect to the limitations, if any, on the power of a town board in reviewing the denial of a permit as provided for in the zoning ordinance, the board, which was the legislative body of the town government, whose power over regulation of use of property in town was plenary could not shed its legislative for administrative capacity and subject itself to restraint which it did not acknowledge or recognize as a legislative body, since there can be no restraint in legal sense, when power to act without it is undisputed.

Expenses incurred pending appeal

Completion of a considerable part of construction work under building permits before expiration of ten-day period allowed for appeal, where permit expressly stated it was subject to appeal, did not operate as an equitable estoppel against cancellation of permits by board of permit appeals, but presented merely a matter for determination by the board in the exercise of its sound discretion.

Where building permits were granted, and building operations thereunder were commenced almost immediately, and issuance of permits and proposed building operations were public and were known to the remonstrants who also knew that building inspector would not intervene to prevent building operations under permits, and remonstrants did not file appeal from granting of permits until almost three months after issuance of permits when the buildings had been substantially completed, the appeal was not taken within reasonable time as required by ordinance and so would be dismissed.

ing to show that the prior decision was based on a mistake of fact.⁴¹ Thus, if there has been a substantial change in the fact situation, the matter may be reopened and reheard.⁴²

In the absence of statutory authorization, however, the board, having once decided an appeal, cannot reopen the matter and rehear it on the same facts;⁴³ and the power of the board to review the decision or determination of an inferior official, on the motion of one of its members, does not confer the power to review, on such motion, an appeal once heard or determined by the board.⁴⁴

Where a new appeal comes to the board from a new ruling, the matter must be passed on,⁴⁵ and if the facts are substantially different the prior determination may be modified or reversed,⁴⁶ the decision as to whether there has been such a change being primarily within the province of the board.⁴⁷

An irregularity or informality in the resolution passed by the board of appeals may be corrected by the board on its own motion,⁴⁸ or the board may be compelled to correct it by an ordinance.⁴⁹ An irregularity is not sufficient to set aside the action of the board, if otherwise legal.⁵⁰

VIII. VARIANCES OR EXCEPTIONS

A. IN GENERAL

§ 268. In General

Zoning laws are said to be unique as to the allowance of variations from their terms.

With respect to the allowance of variations from their prescribed terms, zoning laws have been said to be unique.⁵¹

Necessity. Ordinarily there must be a compliance with zoning regulations or a variance must be obtained dispensing with full compliance.⁵² Under some circumstances, however, the seeking of a variance is not necessary,⁵³ and where a zoning ordinance is invalid as an invasion of an owner's property rights, he should not be required to ask, as a special privilege, for a variance of the restriction, in order to be allowed to continue his use of the property.⁵⁴

ing parking lot use of association's land, which adjoined association's clubhouse, zoning board of appeals entertained association's second appeal to it and decided the matter on merits at such time, prior adjudication of such board would not be res judicata, even though an appeal had not been taken from such prior adjudication.

53. Implied approval of permit by town council

Town council which had failed promptly to fulfill provisions of zoning ordinance as to selection, organization, and proper functioning of zoning board of review, and had impliedly approved issuance by building inspector of a permit for addition to a pre-existing nonconforming use of petitioners, did not, in absence of ordinance providing therefor, act as an interim zoning board of review, and petitioners were not required to file a petition with town council for a variance before commencing construction pursuant to permit.

54. N.Y.—Maxwell v. Incorporated Village of Rockville Centre, 84 N.Y. S.2d 544.

Effect of grant of variance or exceptions. The grant of a variance is not a general authorization to convert to any use in the class without further approval by the zoning authorities.⁵⁵ Exceptions granted to a property owner from a zoning ordinance do not subject him to liability to abutting owners for obtaining them.⁵⁶

Duration. An ordinance may prescribe a time during which variances or exceptions shall be effective.⁵⁷

§ 269. Purpose or Function

The general purpose or function of variances or exceptions is to avoid the harsh or oppressive operation of the zoning laws which would otherwise result.

Various statements of the purpose or function of variances or exceptions have been enunciated by the courts,⁵⁸ such as that they are granted in order to minimize the acknowledged evils of spot zoning by amendment of the zoning ordinances,⁵⁹ or to relieve the harshness, or prevent the oppressive operation, of a zonal restriction in a particular instance;⁶⁰ to apply the discretion of experts to exceptional instances where permits are desired, not strictly conforming to the regulations provided in the ordinance;⁶¹ to correct maladjustments and inequities in the operation of the general regulation;⁶² or to permit reasonable use of particular property and thus guard against unwarranted interference with the fundamental right of property, that is, to secure reasonable zoning.⁶³

Other statements are that they are granted to afford a safety valve so that the carrying out of the strict letter of an ordinance may not occasion unnecessary hardship to particular property owners;⁶⁴ to relieve against the unnecessary and unjust invasion of the right of property which, under special conditions and singular circumstances, would ensue from the burden of the general rule;⁶⁵ to permit the amelioration of the rigors of necessarily general regulations by eliminating the necessity of slavish adherence to the precise letter of limitations where, in a given case, little or no good on the one side and undue hardship on the other would result from a literal enforcement, and to protect the ordinance against attack on the ground of unreasonable interference with private rights;⁶⁶ or to permit the modification of an otherwise legitimate restriction in the exceptional case where, due to unusual conditions, it becomes more burdensome than was intended, and may be modified without impairment of the public purpose.⁶⁷

B. PARTICULAR TERMS OR MATTERS CONSIDERED OR DISTINGUISHED

§ 270. Extension of Nonconforming Use

The grant of an extension of a nonconforming use is the exercise of a power different from, and more limited than, the variance power.

Two kinds of exceptions authorized

Under special statute enabling municipality to enact zoning ordinance and grant exceptions to terms of ordinance in first instance where exception is in harmony with general purpose and intent of ordinance and in accordance with general or special rules contained in ordinance and, secondly, where such exception is reasonably necessary for convenience or welfare of public, exceptions granted in first instance are dependent on general or special rules contained in ordinance, but, in sec-

In some jurisdictions zoning boards or other bodies or officials, in addition to their authority to grant or recommend variances, are empowered to grant "exceptions" or "special exceptions" to zoning ordinances to the extent and under the circumstances specified in such ordinances,⁷⁰ and an "exception," within the meaning of zoning ordinances, has been defined as a dispensation permis-

(3) Where property of petitioner located in industrial district of village was bounded by a private right of way, railroad tracks, a deep water channel, and industrial property, and it did not appear that village ordinances prohibited storage of petroleum products, village board of zoning appeals was authorized to grant variation of regulation in zoning ordinance prohibiting erection of buildings for storage of petroleum. Special permit held not spot zoning

Without mention of exception, the grant of a special permit, under a regulation of the township zoning board which provided for such other uses as the board might in its discretion authorize by special permit, does not constitute spot zoning.

(1) Where the zoning code of a city does not contain general or specific rules in accordance with which a special exception may be granted the zoning board of appeals is without authority to grant such an exception.

sible where the board of zoning appeals finds existing those facts and circumstances specified in the ordinance as sufficient to warrant a deviation from the general rule.⁷¹ Exceptions fulfill the practical recognition that certain uses of property are compatible with the essential design of a particular zone although the use is contrary to the restrictions imposed thereon.⁷²

The jurisdiction of a board or other agency to act under this power is original.⁷³ An application for such a special exception may be made directly to the board⁷⁴ and is addressed to its discretion,⁷⁵ within the latitude fixed by the provisions as to the granting of special exceptions;⁷⁶ and the power is to be exercised pursuant to the standards stated in the ordinance.⁷⁷

Broad discretion

Sound legal discretion

Administrative discretion committed to the board of zoning adjustment to grant exceptions to zoning regulations is not unlimited and it must be a sound legal discretion, and whether a dispensation should be granted is not a matter of grace, but must be determined on legal principles.

D.C.—O'Boyle v. Coe, D.C., 155 F. Supp. 581.

76. D.C.—Hyman v. Coe, D.C., 102 F. Supp. 254.

Discretion held not unfettered

(1) Grant or refusal of a particular use as a special exception to a zoning ordinance does not lie within the unfettered discretion of either the board of adjustment or the courts, and such discretion can only be constitutionally exercised within the standards provided in the ordinance, and unless the proposed use adversely affects health, safety, and morals of the community, it must be allowed.

Pa.—Appeal of O'Hara, 131 A.2d 587, 389 Pa. 35.

(2) However, it has also been held that it was not intent of zoning regulation, relating to authorization of District of Columbia Board of Zoning Adjustment to grant request for special exceptions in certain cases on certain conditions, that appeal for exception must be granted if certain requirements are met.

D.C.—Hyman v. Coe, D.C., 146 F. Supp. 24.

Scope of discretion as legislative matter

Scope of discretion to grant an exception to zoning ordinance to be vested in zoning board of review is a question for town council and not for courts, and in determining whether board has abused its discretion in such respect, zoning ordinance must be applied as it stands.

R.I.—Lawson v. Zoning Bd. of Review of Town of North Providence, 125 A.2d 199.

In harmony with general principles of statute and ordinance

Statute providing for establishment of city zoning board of review with power to make special exceptions to terms of zoning ordinance in harmony with its general purpose and intent did not authorize unrestricted exercise of such power by board, resulting in unreasonable and unnecessary spot zoning, changes in boundary lines of existing zoning districts and substantial changes in the character of a well-established residential neighborhood since such results were contrary to, rather than in harmony with, the general principles of statute and ordinance.

The conditions permitting an exception must be found in the regulations themselves,⁷⁸ and these conditions, if any, may not be altered.⁷⁹ All that is necessary for the grant of an exception is that it be within the scope of the authorization contained in the ordinance and constitute a proper exercise of the sound discretion of the board;⁸⁰ and it has been held that the only function of the board is to determine whether the requirements set forth in the authorizing provision have been met.⁸¹

While a provision in a zoning ordinance granting to the appropriate agency the power to grant special exceptions to such legislation, to the extent and under the circumstances specified therein, gives flexibility to the application of the ordinance,⁸² the Existence of nonconforming use assumed

Zoning ordinance of town authorizing zoning board of review to grant an exception necessary to secure appropriate development of a lot adjacent to buildings that do not conform to ordinance expressly assumed existence of adjacent nonconforming use as a reason for granting an exception, and fact that such use may be a legal nonconforming use does not deprive board of authority to grant an exception.

extent of the power granted under a particular ordinance depends on the language employed therein.⁸³ The grant of power must be strictly construed;⁸⁴ and the power is strictly limited to the situations provided for by the statute and in the ordinance.⁸⁵ However, where the provision authorizing the granting of special exceptions is clear and unambiguous, it requires no construction.⁸⁶ Accordingly, in granting special exceptions the board of zoning appeals must consider the factors set out,⁸⁷ and its action must be reasonable in the light of these and all other pertinent facts.⁸⁸

The terms "variance" and "exception" or "special exception" are frequently used incorrectly, confusingly, and undiscriminatingly.

While the terms "variance" and "exception" or "special exception" are generally regarded as separate and distinct, as discussed infra § 273, the words are frequently used incorrectly in applications for zoning dispensations,⁸⁹ and have been used confusingly and indiscriminatingly even in some ordinances.⁹⁰ Indeed, the two words have often been used as synonymous.⁹¹

It is a common practice to join an application for an exception with an application for a variance on appeal from a denial of a permit, leaving it to the board to determine on which ground it may grant the application;⁹² and many cases discuss exceptions and variances without differentiating one from the other.⁹³

§ 273. — "Variance" Distinguished

"Exceptions" or "special exceptions" are distinguished from "variance" in that the latter permits the use of property in a manner forbidden by the zoning law

Terms construed; "public convenience"

Under regulation providing that special exception may be granted when "public convenience and welfare" will be substantially served, "public convenience" is not used in colloquial manner and is not synonymous with "handy," but connotes that which is suitable and fitting. Construction of particular provisions while "exception" relates to a use permitted by the law, and in that an exception ordinarily need not be based on a showing of hardship.

(1) Provision of zoning regulation, authorizing District of Columbia Board of Zoning Adjustment to permit construction of office buildings and banks in certain residential area if certain conditions were satisfied, was not directive to board to preserve residential character of area, especially in view of fact that board had already allowed in area many changes which could not be said to have preserved residential character of area.

While the terms are frequently confused or used as synonymous, as discussed supra § 272, an "exception" or "special exception" in zoning law is separate and distinct from a "variance,"⁹⁴ and the two authorizations are different in several particulars.⁹⁵

Thus, exceptions may be treated as a legislative process or the exercise of a legislative function, the conditions for which must be found in the zoning ordinance and may not be varied, while variances may be treated as an exercise of the judicial function, whereby literal enforcement of ordinances may be disregarded.⁹⁶ So, also, a variance is authority extended to the owner to use his property in a manner forbidden by the zoning enactment, while an exception allows him to put his property to a use which the enactment expressly permits.⁹⁷

(2) Zoning ordinance providing that in addition to general powers granted to board of adjustment, board may, in harmony with, and subject to, provisions of statute, allowing board to make special exceptions to terms of ordinance, permit a garage, or filling station to be built in district, was intended to create a special exception rather than a variance.

Other statement

In case of an exception, the law itself has foreseen the possibility that a departure from its provisions may be desirable if certain specified facts or circumstances are found to exist, while a variance involves an overriding of the law itself, based on a finding that the law as written would inflict unnecessary hardship on the property owner.

dividual interests merely,⁹⁸ while a variance is a relaxation of the general rule of the ordinance to alleviate conditions peculiar to particular property.⁹⁹

Showing of hardship or other prerequisites. An important distinction between an exception or special exception and a variance is that a special exception need not ordinarily be based on a showing of hardship¹ or other matters required to be proved in a proceeding for a variance,² or satisfy other conditions necessary for the grant of a variance.³ Nevertheless, under an ordinance so providing, the term "unnecessary hardship" may be used as a standard of guidance for the board in cases of special exception.⁴

Appellate or original jurisdiction. It has been held that another distinction between variances and exceptions or special exceptions is that applications for variances come within the appellate jurisdiction of the zoning board of appeals, whereas the application for special exceptions is considered as a matter of original jurisdiction for the board.⁵

§ 274. Conditional Use Permit

In some jurisdictions zoning authorities may grant a "conditional use permit," which is distinct from a variance in that it is granted for a public or quasi-public purpose within the terms of the zoning law, rather than to obviate unnecessary hardship or other conditions for which a variance may be granted.

In some jurisdictions certain zoning bodies or officials are empowered to grant a "conditional use

Accommodation of zoning practice and public needs

Exceptions involve exercise of original jurisdiction for accommodation of zoning practice and public needs exceptional in nature, and thus reasonably to advance essential common interest as integral part of zoning process to same end.

99. Reasonableness of regulation presupposed

A "variance" presupposes reasonableness of zone regulation as a whole, and is a relaxation of general rule of the ordinance to alleviate conditions peculiar to particular property, and thus to permit a use to which it is adapted and avoid undue invasion of right of private property by compelling conformance to unsuitable permissible use, a burden on individual landowner that would be disproportionate to common need.

Requirement of urgent necessity held error

Where county zoning ordinance empowered county board of zoning appeals to grant exception and permit private club in residential district, when in judgment of board such exception should be in harmony with general purpose and intent of zoning plan, board erred in deciding that there was required to be urgent necessity to justify a granting of application for private club in residential section, and great injustice if application were denied.

Md.—Montgomery County v. Merlands Club, Inc., 96 A.2d 261, 202 Md. 279.

Exception not substitute for variance

Zoning ordinance enabling statute did not contemplate that applications for exceptions would be an easy means to avoid necessity of seeking variance with consequent burden thereunder of showing undue hardship.

permit,"⁶ which is a separate and distinct mechanism from a "variance,"⁷ in that it is granted for a public or quasi-public purpose within the terms of the zoning plan or ordinance itself,⁸ rather than to obviate the practical difficulties, or unnecessary hardships, or results inconsistent with the general purposes of the zoning regulations as applied to individual property owners, which must be shown before a variance may be granted.⁹ Thus, conditional use permits are confined to uses of public concern, such as airports, cemeteries, development of natural resources, public utilities, educational institutions, libraries, and governmental enterprises.¹⁰ By the specific terms of the ordinance such uses are permitted in any zoning district subject only to a finding by the planning commission in the first instance, or the city council on appeal, that the use is essential or desirable to the public convenience or welfare.¹¹

The grant of a conditional use permit does not create a new zone;¹² it merely affirms as a fact the existence of the circumstances under which the ordinance by its terms prescribes that such permit shall issue.¹³

§ 275. Amendment; Rezoning

"Variance" is distinguished from "amendment" or "rezoning" in that amendment is concerned primarily with the welfare of the entire community, and only incidentally with a landowner's burdens and rights, and rezoning ordinarily contemplates a zoning change in a comparatively large area rather than in a specific instance.

While "variance" and "amendment" are both mechanisms of release provided by the law of zoning,¹⁴ they are separate and distinct measures.¹⁵ The difference is that variance operates to relieve a particular property of certain burdens in certain circumstances,¹⁶ whereas amendment is concerned primarily with the welfare of the entire community and only incidentally with a landowner's burdens and rights.¹⁷

A "variance" and a "rezoning" are likewise separate and distinct measures,¹⁸ in that "rezoning" ordinarily contemplates a change in existing zoning rules and regulations within a district, subdivision, or other comparatively large area in a given governmental unity, which theretofore has been uniformly zoned in its entirety,¹⁹ while the granting of a "variance" usually contemplates only a special exception to existing zoning laws and regulations in a specific instance, permitting a nonconforming use in order to alleviate undue burden or unnecessary hardship on the property owner which the zoning rules and regulations otherwise impose.²⁰

Modification, amendment, and rezoning are discussed supra §§ 81-123.

Act as legislative or administrative. Where the wording of ordinances must be changed in order to accomplish the desired revision, the act is legislative and not administrative; but, on the other hand, where a regulation is changed pursuant to a provision of an existing ordinance permitting an administrative variance on the finding of certain facts, the act is administrative.²¹

C. POWER TO GRANT

§ 276. In General

Boards of adjustment or appeal are generally given power to grant variances or exceptions from zoning regulations, so as to allow a nonconforming use of property in situations where hardship or practical difficulties would otherwise result.

Since the literal enforcement of zoning regulations in all cases might result in serious injustice to particular individuals in isolated cases, boards of appeal or adjustment or similar bodies usually are vested with power, within prescribed limits, to grant particular property owners a right, generally termed a variance or exception, to use property in nonconformity with the regulations, in certain cases where hardship or practical difficulties would otherwise result,²² or in certain other cases where the Power to grant special exceptions see supra § 271.

Validity of provisions as to variance see supra § 66.

"The ordinance may be arbitrary and discriminatory in isolated cases as applied to certain property, and compliance therewith may present unusual difficulties in many other instances. But it is manifestly impracticable, if not impossible, to enumerate in the ordinance itself the varied factual situations to which the ordinance is not applicable because of constitutional objections or other special considerations. Consequently, almost every zoning ordinance . . . contains provisions whereby an owner may apply to an administrative body for permission to put his land to a nonconforming use."

Cal.—Metcalf v. Los Angeles County, 148 P.2d 645, 647, 24 C.2d 267.

Requirements as to hardship or practical difficulties

(1) Term "hardship," as used in zoning ordinance incorporating statutory provision that city zoning board of review may authorize variance in application of terms of ordinance where literal enforcement thereof will result in unnecessary hardship, refers to degree of interference with ordinary legal property rights and loss or hardship arising therefrom.

R.I.—Tripp v. Zoning Bd. of Review of City of Pawtucket, 123 A.2d 144—Caccia v. Zoning Bd. of Review of City of Providence, 113 A.2d 870—Winters v. Zoning Bd. of Review of City of Warwick, 96 A.2d 337, 80 R.I. 275.

(2) Statute allowing board of adjustment to grant variance where strict application of ordinance would result in peculiar and exceptional practical difficulties to, or undue hardship on, the owner provides but one criteria, since undue hardship necessarily is inclusive of peculiar and exceptional practical difficulties.

N.J.—165 Augusta St. v. Collins, 87 A.2d 889, 9 N.J. 259.

(3) Under ordinance permitting zoning board of appeals to vary zoning ordinance where there are "practical difficulties" or "unnecessary hardships," the words "practical difficulties" are insufficient to afford guide to determine whether variation should be granted, and phrase is to be construed as a whole.

Conn.—Stavola v. Bulkeley, 56 A.2d 645, 134 Conn. 186.

(4) Fact that hardship would be caused applicant for variance would not alone be sufficient to sustain grant of variance.

N.Y.—Gilbert v. Stevens, 135 N.Y.S. 2d 357, 284 App.Div. 1016.

(5) Change of area may be granted as a variance from a zoning ordinance on the ground of practical difficulties alone, without considering whether or not there is an unnecessary hardship.

N.Y.—Village of Bronxville v. Francis, 150 N.Y.S.2d 908, 1 A.D.2d 236, affirmed 135 N.E.2d 724, 1 N.Y.2d 889, 153 N.Y.S. 220.

Fulton v. Board of Appeals of Town of Oyster Bay, 158 N.Y.S.2d 434.

(6) Hardship as ground for variances see infra §§ 290-294.

Emergency conditions

Ordinances providing that because of wartime housing emergency administrative officials "may" waive certain building regulations, and regulations applying to the use and occupancy of buildings, sanction the authority of granting power to issue permits where compliance with building regulations is precluded by wartime restrictions.

Cal.—Lindell Co. v. Board of Permit Appeals of City and County of San Francisco, 144 P.2d 4, 23 C.2d 303.

Variance rather than change of zone

Where municipality was residential community and zoning ordinance was part of comprehensive plan to preserve character of community, proper method to secure permission to use residential property for non-residential purpose was to apply to board of adjustment for a variance rather than seek change of zone from town council.

N.J.—Esso Standard Oil Co. v. Town of Westfield, 110 A.2d 143, 33 N.J. Super. 324.

Spot zoning

(1) An order by board of adjustment and appeals granting a variance so as to permit use of dwelling in an "A" one-family district as a home for the aged was not contrary to public policy and was not void as spot zoning.

Ky.—Thomson v. Tafel, 218 S.W.2d 977, 309 Ky. 753.

(2) Spot zoning held not involved. Ind.—Keeling v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of Indianapolis, 69 N. E.2d 613, 117 Ind.App. 314.

Failure to provide for doctor's offices

Fact that failure of zoning ordinance to provide for doctor's offices in residence zones might prevent ready access to doctors did not render ordinance arbitrary, within ordinance provision authorizing grant of variances where effect of application of ordinance is arbitrary.

Conn.—Paul v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 110 A.2d 619, 142 Conn. 40.

The power to grant a variance or exception may stem directly from a statute or ordinance;²⁴ the authority of a board in this connection has been held solely statutory.²⁵

§ 278. Power in Particular Bodies

Where the power to grant a variance or exception is vested in a particular body, a decision of a different body, granting a variance or exception, is a nullity.

The power to grant a variance or exception from a zoning regulation may be vested in a particular body.²⁶ For example, the power to grant a variance or exception from a zoning regulation may be vested in a board of adjustment²⁷ or a board of

Power not limited by regulation

Zoning board of appeals of city was legally justified in acting in accordance with general statutes of the state and special acts relating to the city in granting variance, and power granted in city charter to board to grant a variance could not be limited to any regulations which purported to restrict the exercise of the power to cases wherein undue hardship resulted solely from the size, shape, or topography of lot.

Conn.—MaBank Corp. v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of Stamford, 120 A.2d 149, 143 Conn. 132.

Special statute not authorizing variance

Where petitioner applied for variance from zoning ordinance enacted by zoning board established under special statute, which did not authorize variances in hardship cases, he could neither invoke provision of general statute, vesting power in zoning boards established thereunder to grant variances in such cases, nor could he raise question as to validity of special statute in omitting such provision in this action.

Powers of village board not enlarged

Section of a village ordinance did not have the effect of enlarging on the general powers of the village board in the matter of granting of variances, where the ordinance merely supplemented provisions of the village law, by specifically setting forth what the board was required to find, in order to justify the grant of a variance, because of practical difficulties or unnecessary hardship.

Emergency housing commission

Statute which empowered emergency housing commission to allow variances, which granted commission jurisdiction over decisions of municipal boards of appeal, or decision of any board specially appointed, and which was enacted to alleviate housing shortage in entire commonwealth, was sufficiently broad to empower commission to allow variances with respect to zoning in city controlled by zoning statute.

Proper function

Proper function of township zoning boards of adjustment is to grant variances from zoning restrictions, give relief from consequent special hardships to individual landowners, and thus forestall and prevent unwarranted invasion of right of private property.

Adequate safeguards

Power to grant variances of a discretionary nature, not requiring a showing of unnecessary hardship, must be given to the board of appeals by the board of trustees, and when such power is given, adequate safeguards to limit and define the discretionary power of the board of appeals must be set up.

N.Y.—Village of Bronxville v. Francis, 134 N.Y.S.2d 59, 206 Misc. 339, modified on other grounds 150 N.Y.S.2d 906, 1 A.D.2d 236, affirmed 153 N.Y.S.2d 220, 1 N.Y.2d 839, 135 N.E.2d 724.

Regulations subject to variance by particular board

Where a zoning board of appeals was limited to consideration of matters arising under ordinances enacted under provisions of the town law relating to zoning and planning, and the building code of the municipality was not enacted under those provisions of the town law, the board was without jurisdiction to grant a variance as to any matter contained in the building code.

§ 279. Construction of Authorizing Provisions

Provisions authorizing the grant of variances are subject to the usual rules of construction.

Provisions authorizing the grant of variances or exceptions are subject to the usual rules of construction;³⁰ and particular words or phrases therein

Where neither city zoning ordinance nor basic statute authorizes permits for exceptions to ordinance, city council may not grant such permits by resolution.

Ark.—Meyer v. Seifert, 225 S.W.2d 4, 216 Ark. 293.

Board of aldermen

Where statute gave board of appeals of city power to grant variances, but provided that exceptions to ordinances may be allowed by either board of appeals of city or council of city or selectmen of town, board of appeals had exclusive power to grant variance, ordinance empowering board of aldermen to grant variance was in conflict with enabling statute, and board of aldermen was not empowered to grant variance; it was in no sense a court when it granted variance, and there was little basis for implying in its decision an adjudication of its authority to act so as to preclude collateral attack on its decision based on its want of authority.

Mass.—Colabufalo v. Board of Appeal of City of Newton, 143 N.E.2d 536.

Review by proper board as not initial decision

Review by city board of appeals of propriety of granting of variance by board of aldermen, which was not empowered to grant variance, was not equivalent of initial decision by board of appeals to grant variance, and all at interest were entitled to decision of board of appeals unaffected by prior decision.

Extension or enlargement of building

Zoning ordinance, authorizing board of zoning appeals to grant a variance permitting extension of an existing or proposed building into a more restricted district, limits the extension of use to the enlargement of a building.

Conn.—Spencer v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 104 A.2d 373, 141 Conn. 155.

Transfer of nonconforming use

Provision of zoning ordinance which permitted variances under certain conditions, but which required determination with respect thereto to be in accord with comprehensive plan set forth in regulations, would be violated by permitting transfer of nonconforming use from one location to another location, where no such use had previously existed.

Conn.—Farr v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Manchester, 95 A.2d 792, 139 Conn. 577.

Provision inapplicable

Paragraph of zoning ordinance providing that, where there are practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships in way of carrying out strict letter of any provision of ordinance, board of zoning appeals may vary such provision in harmony with its general purpose and intent, does not control board's action on application for permit to extend store building in business zone into adjacent residence zone, as authorized by one of six preceding paragraphs.

Specific piece of property

Determination of whether a given piece of realty is "a specific piece of property" within meaning of zoning statute, so as to be properly the subject of consideration for a variance, should take into account the size of the piece of realty in relation to the sizes generally of pieces of property in the zone devoted to the permitted use.

"Building involved"

Where board was vested with authority to grant a variance where strict application of zoning ordinance would deprive owner of reasonable use of lands "or building involved," quoted phrase contemplated situations other than those specifically named in statute, in which a variance could be granted, and included a situation where a permit was sought for improvement and expansion of an existing business.

§ 281. — Judicial Power or Function

It is frequently said that a board in granting or denying an application for a variance exercises a quasi-judicial function.

It has been both affirmed³⁶ and denied³⁷ that a board, in passing on an application for a variance, exercises judicial powers; but it is frequently said that in so doing it exercises a quasi-judicial function,³⁸ which is to be exercised only in the light

Ky.—Stout v. Jenkins, 268 S.W.2d 643.

Wide discretion

(1) Generally.

S.C.—Hodge v. Pollock, 75 S.E.2d 752, 223 S.C. 342.

(2) Although board of standards and appeals has wide discretion given to it in matter of granting variances, it cannot, without reasonable basis, vary zoning laws which have been imposed by legislative body for general good.

N.Y.—Application of American Seminary of The Bible, 104 N.Y.S.2d 660, modified on other grounds 112 N.Y.S.2d 904, 280 App.Div. 792.

Discretion and judgment controlled by law and reason

Mistretta v. City of Newark, 109 A.2d 677, 33 N.J.Super. 205.

Discretion not personal

Tex.—Caruthers v. Board of Adjustment of the City of Bunker Hill Village, Civ.App., 290 S.W.2d 340.

Questions presented

On a property owner's application for a variation, sole questions are whether ordinance confers on administrative board power to grant variation which is asked and whether exercise of wise discretion calls for the use of such power in the particular case, and issue whether without such variation strict enforcement of general rule would work such hardship as to constitute taking of property without due process is not directly presented.

N.Y.—Arverne Bay Const. Co. v. Thatcher, 15 N.E.2d 537, 278 N.Y. 222, 117 A.L.R. 1110.

Arbitrary refusal to exercise discretion

Where zoning board of review denied property owners' application for exception or variance in application of terms of ordinance to permit erection of one-family dwelling and garage on undersized lot on ground that such hardship was self-imposed, such action was an arbitrary refusal to exercise discretion.

§ 282. — Limitations on Power

The power to grant or refuse a variance is not an arbitrary one; it must be exercised within the scope of the authority granted, and not in such a way as to frustrate the scheme or intent of the zoning regulations.

The power to grant or refuse a variance is not an arbitrary one, and may not be exercised arbitrarily,⁴⁰ or with fraud⁴¹ or bad faith,⁴² but is one that may be exercised only where the grounds, circumstances, situations, or conditions specified or contemplated by the empowering provision are present,⁴³ since such specifications are in the nature sight of the general purpose and intent of the ordinance.⁵⁶ Whether a proposed change will derogate from the intent and purpose of the zoning regulation is primarily a question of fact,⁵⁷ although it may become a question of law.⁵⁸

tial change,⁵⁹ but only such as will soften the rigors of the provisions of the zoning ordinance.⁶⁰

The power of the board with respect to variances does not authorize it to deny or revoke a permit to which an applicant is clearly entitled under the zoning regulations;⁶¹ it cannot be exercised so as to

Contiguity to less restricted zone

With respect to the power of the board of appeal to grant variance, fact that the premises involved are contiguous to an area zoned for business is of slight weight when such contiguity existed at the passage of the zoning act.

Mass.—Real Properties v. Board of Appeal of Boston, 65 N.E.2d 199, 319 Mass. 180.

Mere size of parcel, which was held as an entirety and was an integral, undivided tract, did not render grant of variance as to parcel an impairment of zone plan.

Variance held in conformity with zoning act

Ill.—Downey v. Grimshaw, 101 N.E. 2d 275, 410 Ill. 21.

Grant of variance held improper or erroneous

(1) Generally.

N.Y.—Clark v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Town of Hempstead, 92 N. E.2d 903, 301 N.Y. 86, motion denied 95 N.E.2d 44, 301 N.Y. 681, certiorari denied Board of Zoning Appeals of Town of Hempstead v. Clark, 71 S.Ct. 498, 340 U.S. 933, 95 L.Ed. 673.

(2) Where area in zoning district was a homogeneous unit for zoning purposes and had been used exclusively for residential purposes, permitting parcel of substantially more than one acre to be opened up for commercial use by one engaged in business of building, repairing, and storing boats would nullify, or substantially derogate from, intent, or purpose of the zoning ordinance, and, therefore, granting variance to permit such commercial use was error. Mass.—Atherton v. Board of Appeals of Town of Bourne, 136 N.E.2d 201, 334 Mass. 451.

Nonconforming use

Privilege of erecting a nonconforming building or a building for a nonconforming use may not be granted under guise of a variance permit, since action to that effect is in direct conflict with the general purpose and intent of the ordinance and does violence to its spirit.

Tendency of general area toward business

Where tendency of entire general area in which was located a small plot of land for which owner sought a variance, so as to permit a nonconforming business use of such property, was toward business and industry, granting of the variance did not do violence to general purpose and intent of zoning ordinance.

Establishment of fraternal club

Where area zoned residential had been developed for public and quasi-public uses such as schools, churches, synagogues, and outdoor shrines, grant of variance to permit construction and establishment of fraternal club which had to be relocated because its property had been taken for public purposes was not out of harmony with general purpose and intent of zoning ordinance.

"No variance is lawful which does precisely what a change of map would accomplish. . . . When such substantial changes become advisable they must be made by the legislative body of the municipality which alone can change the map and allow a business center in a residential section. It is a legislative matter and not a situation for a variance permit."

Change of classification

(1) Board of adjustment was without authority to grant variance which would, in effect, change property from one classification to another, even though three fourths of tract had originally been zoned for heavy industrial usage and remainder had been zoned for general business usage and variance was sought, on grounds of hardship, in order to permit industrial usage of such remainder.

§ 283. — — — Legislative Functions

The power of a board as to variances does not include power to exercise legislative functions.

The power of a board with respect to variances or exceptions cannot be extended so as to include power to exercise legislative functions;⁶³ variances should not be employed as a substitute for the normal legislative process,⁶⁴ and the discretion of a board to

(2) An order of city zoning board of appeals, granting variance to permit use of certain premises in residence zone as lumber yard, was not invalid, as assumption of legislative power, not given board by city charter, to place premises in different zone, since order merely purported to relieve premises of some of restrictions imposed by ordinance on property within such residence zone.

Conn.—Plumb v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 108 A.2d 899, 141 Conn. 595.

Use classification as legislative province

It would be palpable misuse of administrative function of board of adjustment to provide for business use of tract, zoned for residences by local legislative authority, in order to avoid cost of school facilities and administration were it devoted to ordained use, nor could board by means of variance supply omission from ordinance or provision for shopping centers, since use classification is a legislative province and board has no legislative power.

N.J.—Moriarty v. Pozner, 121 A.2d 527, 21 N.J. 199.

Spot zoning as test of nature of remedy

If the relief sought could not be obtained by municipal legislation because it would be spot zoning, then the proper remedy is an application for a variance, but where the relief sought would not be open to attack as spot zoning, then the remedy is within the jurisdiction of the legislative body and not the board of adjustment.

power of the board may be made to apply to all cases, including cases of unnecessary hardship, where the property involved is more than a stated distance beyond the border of a district wherein the proposed use is permitted.⁶⁷ The board may have power actually to grant a variance where the property is within a stated distance of a district in which the proposed use is permitted;⁶⁸ but where the property is situated beyond the stated distance of a district in which the proposed use is permitted, the governing body is without authority to grant a variance in the absence of a recommendation by the board.⁶⁹

The governing body of the city is not required to approve such recommendations, but must exercise an independent determination,⁷⁰ and it may, by resolution, approve or disapprove an affirmative recommendation of a board of adjustment with respect to a variance.⁷¹ If a local governing body chooses to accept and to confirm the findings and conclusions of a board of adjustment on an application for a variance, it may do so by passing a resolution to that effect, but the governing body is free to draw different or additional conclusions from the facts as determined by the board.⁷² The governing body is not required to give notice or to hold a hearing before rejecting the recommendation of the board that a request for a variance be granted.⁷³

The action of a board of adjustment in recommending to the municipal governing body that a variance be granted is presumed to be valid, and the burden of proof to rebut such presumption rests on one attacking the action taken.⁷⁴

§ 285. Exercise of Power in General

It is improper to deny a variance to which the applicant is clearly entitled; but a variance should be granted only if reasonable and within the scope of the authority granted.

Whether a variance should be granted must be determined on the facts and circumstances of each particular case.⁷⁵ It is proper to grant, and improper

Restriction on power to recommend

(1) The exercise of power under statutory subsection authorizing boards of adjustment to recommend to governing boards of municipalities that a structure or use be allowed in a district restricted against such structure or use is conditioned on compliance with standards prescribed by preceding subsection under which boards may authorize variance from terms of ordinance when literal enforcement will result in unnecessary hardship, to the end that the spirit of the ordinance shall be observed and substantial justice done.

struction of dwelling on lot having frontage of forty feet, and most dwellings in area surrounding lot had been constructed on lots having sixty foot frontage or less, board was justified in granting variance from amended zoning ordinance which required seventy-five-foot frontage, authorizing construction on lot with frontage of less than seventy-five but more than forty feet.

Intention to provide relief outside of statute

Where board made no pretense of adherence to statutory principle in granting variance, but intended to provide measure of relief outside of statute itself and in direct conflict with statutory terms, action constituted excess of jurisdiction.

Ordinance in conflict with statute

City's zoning ordinance, if interpreted, as limiting power of board of adjustment in granting variances, is in conflict with statute giving a board of adjustment power to authorize, on appeal in specific cases, such variance from terms of ordinance as will not be contrary to public interest where, owing to special conditions, a literal enforcement of ordinance will result in unnecessary hardship.

Variance as to usable area

The rules with reference to what must be shown to warrant a variance of zoning regulations with respect to use also apply with respect to a variance from a restriction as to the proportion of the area of property which may be used.

Extension of use into prohibited zone

Zoning ordinance permitting board of zoning appeals to grant a variance permitting extension of an existing commercial or industrial establishment in any district does not authorize extension of a use, permitted in one zone, across a zone boundary into another zone where that use is prohibited.

Ownership of adjoining lot

Under provision of town law authorizing board to vary or modify application of any regulation or provisions of ordinance on an appeal, board had jurisdiction to grant variance to owner of lot who also owned adjoining lot, although zoning ordinance provided for such variance for separately owned lots.

N.Y.—Weeks v. Koehler, 134 N.Y.S. 2d 796.

Contract vesting special privilege or exemption

(1) It was not within authority of zoning board of adjustment to vest in landowner by contract special privilege or exemption on condition to use premises in violation of general use restriction under zoning regulations binding on all other landowners within zone.

N.J.—V. F. Zahodiakin Engineering Corp. v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of City of Summit, supra.

Elements of estoppel wanting

Where board granted exception, on certain conditions, to terms of zoning ordinance, and its action was coram non iudice and void, and landowner was presumed to know of invalidity of exception when he expended money to make lands suitable for prohibited use, want of fundamental power by board to grant variance could not be indirectly supplied by application of doctrine of estoppel in pais, as elements of estoppel were wanting.

N.J.—V. F. Zahodiakin Engineering Corp. v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of City of Summit, supra.

Side yards

Under zoning ordinance granting board of adjustment authority to vary provisions relating to buildings and locations in cases where literal enforcement of provisions of ordinance would work a hardship, board had authority to vary provisions of zoning ordinance applying to side yards.

Motor lodge

Fact that there was no reference to a motor lodge anywhere in zoning ordinance did not deprive board of authority to allow exception in residential district for erection of motor lodge, in absence of specific definition to contrary in ordinance.

of North Bergen Tp., 91 A.2d 597, 22 N.J.Super. 161.

Prior nonconforming use or variance

Neither a preexisting use of premises for purpose not conforming to zoning resolution or a nonconforming use thereof by virtue of variance granted by city board of standards and appeals can constitute a basis for granting a new variance.

Increase of tax ratables

(1) Intrusion of a forbidden business use in a residential zone, by means of a variance, to increase tax ratables, real or personal, is inadmissible, since such course would contravene constitutional and statutory principle of zoning by districts in accordance with character of lands and structures and their peculiar suitability for particular uses, and uniformity of use within division, and would make for "spot zoning" and disintegration of zone classification. N.J.—Moriarty v. Pozner, 121 A.2d 527, 21 N.J. 199.

(2) Board of adjustment was unauthorized to grant variance to permit construction of shopping center in residential district on ground that erection of center would produce substantial ratables for township and would impose no financial burden for erection of additional schools which would result if premises were developed for residential purposes. Public interest weighed against individual interest

In deciding whether a relaxation of zoning regulations in a given situation is warranted, board must inevitably weigh considerations of public interest against individual interest.

Conn.—McMahon v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 101 A.2d 284, 140 Conn. 433.

Health, safety, and morals

Primary concern of a zoning board nance⁹⁹ may be factors of controlling importance in determining whether a variance is warranted; public convenience has been held not a deciding factor,¹ although it may, in some cases, have weight;² and the character of the neighborhood is always an important element in variance cases.³

The power to grant variances should be exercised only for the benefit of the public,⁴ with due regard for the preservation or protection of the rights of others, including neighboring landowners,⁵ and not of adjustment, in passing on an application for a variance, is not health, safety, morals, etc., but rather to what extent specific use of property will affect them.

Pa.—Levinson v. Power, 3 Pa. Dist. & Co. 2d 170.

Acquisition of realty in public interest

Where corporation acquired realty in residential use district with intent to use it as an electric distribution substation, fact that realty was acquired in public interest did not entitle company to a variance where statutory prerequisite to variance was not met.

Use of property by children

Where property was privately owned, zoning board could not deny variation or exception to allow construction on it merely because children who had been using it for years would be thereby denied free use of it.

Public convenience construed

(1) In zoning regulations providing that special exception may be granted to permit location of churches in certain districts when "public convenience and welfare" will be substantially served, "public convenience" is not used in colloquial manner and is not synonymous with "handy," but it connotes that which is suitable or fitting.

Conn.—West Hartford Methodist

(2) As used in section of zoning ordinance providing that "Subject to the rules set forth in this Section," zoning board of appeals shall approve any special use of any lot area or building within any use district if special use is necessary at that location for public convenience, quoted words mean that special uses mentioned in such section are subject only to rules contained in such section, that other sections can have no application, and that only test is public convenience and necessity.

N.H.—Gelinis v. City of Portsmouth, 85 A.2d 896, 97 N.H. 248.

Balance of equities

Board was not obligated to grant a variance in zoning on ground of unnecessary hardship alone, but was required to balance such hardship against equities, namely, to what exin a manner which is contrary to the public interest or good.⁶ So, the board may grant a variance or exception only where doing so will not be contrary to the public interest or welfare, where substantial justice will thereby be done, and where the use permitted will be in harmony with, rather than contrary to, the spirit, intent, and general purpose of the zoning regulation;⁷ but the fact that tent variance would interfere with whole zoning plan and rights of owners of other property.

Liberality as to changes in nonconforming uses

Where zoning ordinance provided that every variance had to be in harmony with general purpose and intent of zoning regulation so that substantial justice could be done, granting of variance to permit extension of nonconforming use was proper in view of fact that ordinance permitted city zoning board of appeals great liberality as to changes in nonconforming uses.

The test to be applied in granting a variance under zoning regulations is whether the variance or regulation promotes public health, safety, and general welfare after giving reasonable consideration, among other things, to the character of the district, its peculiar suitability for particular uses, the conservation of property values and the direction of building development in accordance with a well-considered plan.

N.Y.—Thomas v. Board of Standards and Appeals of City of New York, 33 N.Y.S.2d 219, 263 App.Div. 352, reversed on other grounds 48 N.E. 2d 284, 290 N.Y. 109.

Circumstances not justifying variance

(1) Property owner who sought variance in order to convert private dwelling into grocery in a single-residence district was not entitled to variance on grounds that value of real estate in immediate vicinity would not be lessened, that no substantial physical changes in property were necessary or contemplated, that changes were commenced in ignorance of ordinance, and that denial of variance would impose financial hardship.

N.H.—Mater v. City of Dover, 79 A. 2d 844, 97 N.H. 13.

(2) Although convalescent home had been operated in an A-1 residential district for fourteen years in violation of zoning ordinance, and department of health had issued to petitioners and their predecessors annual permits for conduct of such a home, board properly denied their application for a variance to permit continued maintenance and operation of home.

N.Y.—Hepner v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of City of Mount Vernon, 152 N.Y.S.2d 984.

Difficulty of access

(1) Difficulty of access to rear of tract of realty held not sufficient basis to support variance.

N.J.—Leimann v. Board of Adjustment of Cranford Tp., Union County, 88 A.2d 337, 9 N.J. 336.

(2) Fact that rear seventy feet of thirty-seven-foot lot retained by owner when front part of lot was sold before enactment of city zoning ordinance had no street frontage and was accessible only across owner's adjoining lot and was therefore not adaptable to any other use warranted granting a variance to permit completion on such lot in an "A" residential zone of storage building to be used in connection with business which owner had conducted at rear of adjoining lot for many years.

N.J.—Kurovski v. Board of Adjustment of City of Bayonne, 78 A.2d 429, 11 N.J.Super. 433.

Life of permit

(1) The granting of a variance which would otherwise be improper is not justified by the fact that the permit is made temporary rather than permanent.

of City of Summit, 86 A.2d 127, 8 N.J. 386.

Prevention of competition to existing businesses of the same character is not a factor to be considered in passing on an application for a variance.

Conn.—Benson v. Zoning Board of Appeals of City of Hartford, 27 A. 2d 389, 129 Conn. 280.

Expansion of a nonconforming use does not, in and of itself, entitle the owner to erect structure on portion of his land not previously occupied by his business enterprise, but it is an important factor in considering whether a variance should be granted for that purpose.

Pa.—Appeal of Mack, 122 A.2d 48, 384 Pa. 586.

No substantial inconvenience to neighborhood

Board of standards and appeals may grant a variance to enable owner to make reasonable and profitable use of his property, if that can be done without violence to general zoning plan and without substantial inconvenience to immediate neighborhood.

N.Y.—Woltman v. Murdock, 168 N.Y. S.2d 572, 8 Misc.2d 969.

Restrictive covenants not considered

In proceeding on application for grant of special exception, board properly made determination without reference to restrictive covenants allegedly binding land in question.

Md.—Perry v. County Bd. of Appeals for Montgomery County, 127 A.2d 507, 211 Md. 294.

12. Existing uses

The uses which exist in neighborhood constitute a condition which must be considered in determining what inhibitions may be justly imposed against other properties in the neighborhood, and conditions which exist on a part of a restricted street may serve to call for an exception as to that part.

N.J.—Hann v. Borough of Sea Girt, 46 A.2d 47, 134 N.J.Law 74—Bianchi v. Morey, 24 A.2d 566, 128 N.J. Law 219.

13. Md.—Marino v. City of Baltimore, 137 A.2d 198, 215 Md. 206.

14. Alleviation of hazards

A temporary and conditional permit in contravention of the regular zoning restrictions should be allowed where it is necessary to promote the good of the municipality as a whole as well as to alleviate and reduce effectively the hazards of a serious emergency.

nicipality.¹⁵ Remonstrances or objections, by adjacent landowners or others, to the grant of a variance may be given some consideration, but are not conclusive.¹⁶ The determination of a petition for a variance cannot be determined by a poll of the sentiment of the neighborhood.¹⁷

A board, in passing on an application for a variance or exception, must give consideration to factors specified in the zoning provision.¹⁸ It has been held that the action of the board of appeal in varying a zoning regulation to permit the alteration of a residence for use as a retail store is not erroneous when it appears that the neighborhood, when the zoning regulation went into effect, was not exclusively residential.¹⁹

Aesthetic grounds. While aesthetic grounds are not to be completely disregarded in determining whether a variance should be granted,²⁰ they are not enough to warrant a denial.²¹

Duration of variance. Whatever the duration of the variance, whether for a definite or an indefinite period, it must ex necessitate be grounded in the policy of the statute.²²

§ 289. — Effect of Other Applications or Nonconforming Uses

In passing on an application for a variance, action taken on other applications, or the existence of nonconforming uses in the vicinity, is not conclusive.

The fact that variances have been granted to some owners and denied to others does not establish unreasonable discrimination.²³ Likewise, the fact that other premises in the vicinity have been permitted to be put to a use contrary to the zoning restrictions is not a sufficient ground to require the granting of a variance or exception to an applicant for a similar use of his property,²⁴ particularly where it is not

N.Y.—Burke v. Cohen, 13 N.Y.S.2d 984.

15. Possibility not controlling

Fact that zoning variance might result in concentration of so many families as to financially burden township in maintenance of public schools and police protection, was not controlling, consequences suggested being too remote.

The grant of a variance to permit a particular use should not be controlling, as a matter of law, as to a subsequent application for a variance to permit a different use,²⁷ but is a circumstance of some force

Exception usually justified

Existence of an unnecessary hardship usually justifies granting of an exception.

Md.—Marino v. City of Baltimore, 137 A.2d 198, 215 Md. 206.

What must be shown

(1) All relevant factors, taken together, must indicate such special conditions that property cannot reasonably be put to a conforming use because of limitation imposed by its classification under ordinance to warrant variance on ground of unnecessary hardship.

Ind.—City of East Chicago, Ind. v. Sinclair Refining Co., 111 N.E.2d 459, 232 Ind. 295.

(2) Before board may exercise discretion to grant a variance on ground of unnecessary hardship, record must show that land cannot yield a reasonable return if used only for purpose allowed in particular zone, that plight of owner is due to unique circumstances and not to general conditions in neighborhood which may reflect unreasonableness of zoning ordinance itself, and that use to be authorized by variance will not alter essential character of locality.

(3) In this holding, phrase "unique circumstances" is not to be construed as "unique hardship," as though there were a requirement for proving something more severe than an unnecessary hardship.

N.Y.—Village of Bronxville v. Francis, 150 N.Y.S.2d 906, 1 A.D.2d 236, affirmed 135 N.E.2d 724, 1 N.Y.2d 839, 153 N.Y.S.2d 220.

Off-street parking

To authorize variance in case of a commercial establishment where off-street parking requirements are involved, building must be devoted to some extraordinary use which makes requirement of off-street parking unnecessary, or enforcement of parking requirement must be shown to work an unreasonable hardship.

"Unnecessary" defined

(1) The word "unnecessary" as used in statute empowering a board of adjustment to authorize such variance from terms of ordinance as will not be contrary to public interest, where, owing to special conditions, a literal enforcement of ordinance will result in "unnecessary" hardship, means "not required to give full effect to purpose of ordinance."

N.H.—St. Onge v. City of Concord, N.H., 63 A.2d 221, 223, 95 N.H. 306.

(2) "Unnecessary," qualifying word "hardships," means hardships which would not follow as ordinary results of adoption of zoning plan as a whole.

Conn.—Stavola v. Bulkeley, 56 A.2d 645, 134 Conn. 188.

Test of necessity

Where property use to be permitted by variance sought runs counter to fundamental zoning principles, hardship resulting from strict application of ordinance to such property is necessary hardship which must be borne by owner thereof, but if there is real hardship, which can be alleviated by granting variance without materially impairing effectiveness of zoning regulations as whole so as to be out of harmony with their purposes, board has power to grant variance.

Conn.—Plumb v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 108 A.2d 899, 141 Conn. 599.

Abrogation of intent of ordinance

"Unnecessary hardship," as used in zoning statute, does not embrace restriction of desire to perform an act which would abrogate very intent and purpose of ordinance enacted pursuant thereto, amend, if not partially repeal, an act regularly adopted by local legislature, and create a means by which entire ordinance could be frustrated at will by limitless exceptions.

Matters not to be considered

Where lot did not have sufficient frontage to conform with minimum frontage requirements for residential lots under zoning ordinance, fact that lot owners may have violated the law in starting construction without a proper permit, or may have interfered with right of borough in regard to a drainage easement on the lot, and, as result, might have caused harm to others, should not have been considered in determining the existence of that degree of hardship which would require granting of a variance.

Convenience to tenants

Fact that establishment by commercial cleaner of a depot in the basement of a multi-family house where clothing to be cleaned may be deposited would be a convenience to tenants would not justify grant of a variance on ground that service was merely incidental to primary residential function of building and not primarily commercial in nature.

N.J.—Zahn v. Board of Adjustment, of City of Newark, 133 A.2d 358, 45 N.J.Super. 516.

Urgent necessity

(1) Special exceptions to a zoning ordinance will never be granted to gratify mere convenience; there must be a necessity, and that necessity must be so urgent, and the facts so extraordinary, as to require withdrawal of that particular case from application of accepted rule.

Md.—Cleland v. Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, 84 A.2d 49, 193 Md. 440.

(2) This rule applies to provision of zoning ordinance authorizing board of municipal and zoning appeals to grant within one hundred feet of a boundary line between two use districts any use permitted in that one of such use districts which has lower classification.

Land located in two zones

Fact that land lies partly in zone in which proposed buildings may be erected and partly in contiguous zone in which such buildings are prohibited is not a sufficient reason for a variance.

Special reasons

(1) A municipal board of adjustment may recommend variance for approval or disapproval by municipal governing body, where there are special reasons therefor, as required by statute, without proof of exceptional undue hardship to applicant for variance or showing of uniqueness because of extraordinary condition of property involved.

ception in the case of area variances.⁴⁰

By way of a guiding principle, it may be said that a variance should be granted where, and only where, the application of the regulation in question to particular property greatly decreases or practically destroys its value for any permitted use,⁴¹

or where such application bears so little relationship to the purposes of zoning that, as to the property in question, the regulation is in effect confiscatory, arbitrary, or capricious,⁴² or constitutes an unnecessary, unwarranted, or unjust invasion of, or interference with, a fundamental right of property.⁴³

(2) Quoted term, in statute subsection authorizing board of adjustment to recommend, and governing body to grant, variances in particular cases and for "special reasons," was intended to have a broader and more liberal significance than "undue hardship" specified in preceding subsection.

N.J.—Grimley v. Village of Ridgewood, 133 A.2d 649, 45 N.J.Super. 574.

(3) Disagreement by board of adjustment with policy of zoning ordinance is not special reason which will justify granting of variance.

N.J.—Keller v. Town of Westfield, 121 A.2d 419, 39 N.J.Super. 430.

Limitation on authority of board

Statutory provision authorizing board of adjustment to grant variance in a case of exceptional narrowness, shallowness, or shape of a specific property at time of enactment of ordinance, or of other extraordinary and exceptional situation or condition of such piece of property, constitutes a legislative declaration of elements of proof of a restrictive nature and a limitation on authority of board of adjustment to grant a variance on ground of unnecessary hardship. N.J.—165 Augusta St. v. Collins, 87 A.2d 889, 9 N.J. 259.

40. Special hardship not required

In absence of statutory provision to contrary, special hardship need not be established as a condition to granting an area variance from provisions of a zoning ordinance.

§ 291. — — — Exceptional or Unusual Hardship

The hardship relied on as ground for a variance must be unusual or peculiar to the property involved, and different from that suffered throughout the zone or neighborhood.

Proof of an exceptional and undue hardship to the individual landowner is a jurisdictional prerequisite, or sine qua non, to the alleviating action of the board in granting a variance or exception.⁴⁶ To justify the grant, the claimed hardship must be peculiar, singular, unique, or exceptional in nature.⁴⁷

Oppression; individual burdens

In enactment of statute empowering municipal boards of adjustment to authorize, in specific cases, such variance from terms of zoning ordinances as will not be contrary to public interest, where a literal enforcement of ordinance will result in unnecessary hardship, legislature intended that where no oppression or unnecessarily great burden exists and no great individual injustice results, ordinance should be applied strictly, but, if a situation causes oppression and unnecessary individual burdens, zoning ordinance should not be applied strictly and literally. Ala.—Nelson v. Donaldson, 50 So.2d 244, 255 Ala. 76.

Board's opinion as to original zoning

Opinion of zoning board of review that original zoning of a particular area was improper or illegal does not constitute undue hardship for which a variance may be granted.

Peculiar condition or location of land

A hardship resulting from peculiar topography or condition of land or its particular location rendering it unsuitable for use permitted in zone wherein it lies may be hardship contemplated by city ordinance authorizing board of zoning appeals to vary application of regulations therein, where there are unnecessary hardships in way of carrying out strict letter of any provision thereof.

Adjacent dwellings similarly affected

Where factors and disadvantages asserted as unfavorable to use of a lot for construction of dwelling in conformity with zoning use restriction were not peculiar to particular lot, but adjacent dwellings were similarly affected, lot was not so uniquely circumstanced as is required for grant of a variance to a zoning regulation.

Structures on two lots involved

Where applicant sought variance to zoning ordinance so that he could erect garage on one lot to serve applicant's apartment house on another lot, hardship asserted related to apartment house property, and not property for which variance was sought, and variance could not be granted.

Adaptability of property to permitted use

(1) Situation or condition of property is not to be deemed extraordinary and exceptional, or to impose undue hardship on owner within intentment of statute allowing granting of variances, if, viewed in setting of its environment, property may reasonably be adapted to a permitted use.

N.J.—Preye v. Board of Adjustment of North Bergen Tp., 91 A.2d 597, 22 N.J.Super. 161.

(2) Under statute permitting variance where, by reason of exceptional topographic conditions, application of zoning regulation would result in undue hardship, a situation or condition of a piece of property is not to be deemed extraordinary and exceptional and to impose undue hardship on owner if, viewed in setting of its environment, property may reasonably be adapted to a permitted use.

N.J.—Rexon v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Haddonfield, 89 A.2d 233, 10 N.J. 1.

Changes in neighborhood which could support change in zoning ordinance do not necessarily support variance for benefit of one property owner therein.

Conditions rendering property unsuitable for residential use

An application for permission to put property zoned as residential to a nonconforming use is properly denied where conditions which render applicant's property unsuitable for residential use are general and not confined to such property, remedy being by revision of general regulation and not by granting special privilege of a variation to single owners.

Lack of particular business in town

Zoning board of appeals had no power to grant variance solely on ground that the lack of type of business sought to be conducted worked a hardship on town as a whole.

of property.⁵¹ General hardship is relievable only by a revision of the general rule of the zoning ordinance, a local legislative process, or the judicial process,⁵² or by an attack on the constitutionality of the ordinance,⁵³ or a change in the regulation.⁵⁴

§ 292. — Self-Created Hardship; Prior Knowledge

Except for area restrictions, a variance will not be granted for a self-created or self-inflicted hardship. Where property is purchased with knowledge of use restrictions thereon, a claim of variance on the ground of hardship will generally be denied or looked on with much disfavor.

Except for area restrictions,⁵⁵ a self-created or self-inflicted hardship may not be made the basis for a variance or for a claim thereof;⁵⁶ the hardship complained of must arise directly out of the application of the ordinance to circumstances or conditions

Reckless conduct

Difficulties and hardships for which a zoning variance will be granted do not include those occasioned solely by reckless conduct of him who seeks variation. Conn.—Misuk v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of City of Meriden, 86 A.2d 180, 138 Conn. 477.

One who has continued construction of building after it has been seriously questioned whether plan of construction complies with zoning ordinance cannot ordinarily secure a variance on basis of his self-inflicted hardship.

Construction too near lot lines

Where building inspector refused certificate of occupancy on ground that building was constructed too

beyond the control of the party involved.⁵⁷ So, a hardship which has been willfully and intentionally created does not justify the grant of a variance.⁵⁸

Prior knowledge of existing zoning restrictions has been held a material element in determining the existence of hardship,⁵⁹ although not conclusive.⁶⁰ Under other authority, the question whether an applicant is entitled to a variance because of the hardship flowing from a literal application of the terms of the ordinance is in no way dependent on his knowledge or lack of knowledge of the existence of zoning restrictions affecting the land.⁶¹

So, one who purchases property with knowledge of use restrictions thereon will generally not be permitted to claim special or unnecessary hardship,⁶² although there is authority to the contrary effect.⁶³ near lot lines, hardship resulting was, under circumstances, self-imposed or self-created, and not one imposed by zoning ordinance, as contemplated by statutory provision authorizing variance.

N.J.—Deer-Glen Estates v. Board of Adjustment and Appeal of Borough of Fort Lee, 121 A.2d 26, 39 N.J.Super. 380.

Conversion to prohibited use

One who buys a property which is at the time, devoted to a permissible use, cannot create a hardship for himself by attempting to convert it to another use which he knew at the time of his purchase was not allowed in its existing condition.

Pa.—Brodsky v. McShain, 71 Pa. Dist. & Co. 595.

Rule of self-imposed hardship was inapplicable to an area restriction, and therefore, determination of zoning board of appeals allowing variance from area restriction in its zoning ordinance was proper, notwithstanding fact that applicant for variance obtained title to his premises subsequent to adoption of zoning ordinance in question.

Belief that use would be valid

Where landowners knew of zoning plan when they constructed their garage, their ostensible belief that contemplated use thereof would not be violative of zoning regulations could not be elevated to dignity of proof of special reasons for grant of variance, including alleged undue hardship in legal sense.

Use of contiguous property

Subdivision of property

Fact that property owner, who was an attorney, had prior knowledge of existing zoning ordinance which would make it impossible for him to subdivide property which he purchased, to permit erection of two homes, was material element to be considered in determining existence of hardship on later application for variance, but such prior knowledge was not conclusive.

Difficulty in selling; expense of maintenance

(1) A zoning ordinance does not necessarily permit each owner to make maximum use of his property, and even though it might become more difficult for an owner to sell property because of neighborhood changes, that would not furnish ground for grant of a variance.

Pa.—Appeal of Michener, 115 A.2d 367, 382 Pa. 401.

(2) Mere fact that it was expensive to maintain as a residence a house located in a residential zone, and that it would be difficult to sell such house, was not sufficient ground for granting a variance, since it merely established that it would be more profitable to put property to a commercial use.

Deprivation of employment

Where light industrial activity was permitted in building in residential zone on ground of nonconforming use, granting of variance to permit conduct of heavy industrial machine shop could not be justified on ground that two hundred or more persons would be deprived of employment if variance were denied.

portunity to get an increased return from the property,⁷⁷ is not a sufficient reason for granting a variance or exception; but financial advantage, although not controlling, is not entirely irrelevant,⁷⁸ and financial loss is a factor to be considered.⁷⁹ The fact that an increase⁸⁰ or decrease⁸¹ in the value of the property will result from the grant or refusal of a variance will not, standing alone, constitute a sufficient hardship.

*The fact that the owner has incurred expenses in anticipation of a grant of a variance is not a controlling reason for the grant thereof.*⁸²

§ 294. — — Existence of Hardship in Particular Cases

Whether hardship exists is a question of fact; what constitutes unnecessary hardship depends on all the circumstances of each case.

Whether or not hardship exists is a question of fact;⁸³ what constitutes unnecessary hardship must depend on all the circumstances of each case⁸⁴ without any rights of prior owners tacked on.⁸⁵

Betterment of neighborhood

A board's discretion to permit a variance is not so circumscribed as to require a property owner to reconstruct building to a conforming use regardless of financial burden that would be incident thereto, especially where change sought is one from a nonconforming use to another more desirable nonconforming use that will not adversely affect, but will better, neighborhood.

Alteration of house

Where character of district had already changed to such a degree that proposed alteration of house to convert it from a four-apartment building into a six-apartment building, would be consistent with conditions already existing, and owner could not operate building profitably unless converted to a six-apartment building, unnecessary hardship existed so as to authorize variance.

N.H.—St. Onge v. City of Concord, 63 A.2d 221, 95 N.H. 306.

Land rendered unavailable for public use

Where land was subdivided prior to effective date of zoning ordinance, operation of ordinance to render un-available for economic use the por-tion retained by subdivider would im-pose an unnecessary hardship, with-in statute providing for appropriate relief from unnecessary hardship.

Squaring building

Where board of adjustment per-mitted owner of building to extend portion of front of building beyond setback requirement of building ordi-nance, subsequent refusal of board to permit extension of remainder of frontage, so as to square building, would result in unnecessary hard-ship to owner.

D. PROCEDURE

§ 295. In General

In order that a variance permit be valid, there must be substantial compliance with procedural requirements.

In order that a variance permit be valid, there must be substantial compliance with procedural requirements,⁸⁸ and failure to pursue the remedy of application for a variance or special exception will ordinarily bar the property owner from seeking the aid of the courts.⁸⁹ Failure to comply with directory provisions of the zoning ordinance that the application shall be accompanied by complete plans and description of the property, and by evidence of the ability and intention of the applicant to proceed with actual construction within a designated time from the date of approval does not require that the variance be denied.⁹⁰

§ 296. Application

An application for a variance or exception is necessary and there must be a compliance with requirements as to the form and contents of the application.

Ordinarily, the board may not grant a variance or exception on its own motion.⁹¹ An application for such relief is necessary,⁹² and it is the duty of the board authorized to grant variances to entertain a proper application for such relief.⁹³ Unless the statute or ordinance so requires, application to a for residential lots was not in itself a hardship which would warrant granting of a variance permitting subdivision of property to permit erection of two houses.

N.J.—Bierce v. Gross, 135 A.2d 561, 47 N.J.Super. 148.

Increase of business

(1) Under former statute authorizing variances where, due to exceptional conditions, strict application of ordinance would result in undue hardship, landowner in residential district who has been permitted to operate a nonconforming business may not thereafter increase his business and successfully assert hardship as basis of variance permitting installation of new facilities required as result of increase of business.

N.J.—Hochberg v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Freehold, 123 A.2d 53, 40 N.J.Super. 271—Gerkin v. Village of Ridgewood, 86 A.2d 275, 17 N.J.Super. 472.

(2) Single owner's profit or disadvantage, see supra § 293.

Development purposes

A desire to make property useful for development purposes did not constitute hardship entitling landowner to variance authorizing construction of sand and gravel processing plant in a residential use district.

N.Y.—Goldstein v. Board of Appeals of Town of Oyster Bay, 102 N.Y.S. 2d 922.

Existence of nonconforming uses

Existence in a use district of nonconforming uses did not justify granting of a variance when circumstances did not show undue hardship, since one variation from a use cannot sustain or compel a second.

N.J.—Beirn v. Morris, 103 A.2d 361, 14 N.J. 529.

Building restriction

Fact that land in residential zone in city was burdened with a building restriction set up by deed in chain of title, did not constitute unnecessary hardship entitling owner of lot to variance, since building restriction was a burden voluntarily accepted by owner of lot when he purchased lot subject to building restriction.

N.J.—Protomastro v. Board of Adjustment of City of Hoboken, 70 A.2d 873, 3 N.J. 494.

Effect on light or air of adjoining properties

Fact that granting use variance will not deprive adjoining properties of light, air, or ventilation is not justification for granting such variance on grounds of unnecessary hardship.

N.Y.—Ryback v. Murdock, 148 N.Y.S. 2d 322, 1 A.D.2d 132.

Conditional agreement of sale

Where prospective purchasers of real estate have entered into an agreement of sale conditioned on their being able to obtain a permit from zoning board of adjustment for conducting their business on premises, refusal to grant such a permit does not place any unnecessary hardships on them.

Pa.—McNichol v. Gallagher, 66 Pa. Dist. & Co. 338.

Veterinary hospital

Purchase of a lot for prohibited purpose of building a veterinary hospital does not constitute a hardship, since a lot does not attain character of a veterinary hospital merely because of profession of its owner.

building inspector or similar administrative officer or body for a permit to do something prohibited by a regulation, and denial of such application, are not prerequisite to an application to a board of appeals or adjustment for a variance.⁹⁴

An application for a variance concedes, for the purposes of the application, the validity and constitutionality of the zoning ordinance⁹⁵ and also precludes the assertion of a claim of nonconforming use,⁹⁶ although there is some authority holding that an application for an exception from a zoning ordinance is an appropriate way to raise the question of the validity of a zoning ordinance as applied to a particular parcel of property.⁹⁷

Form and requisites. An application for a variance should comply with such requirements as may be imposed with respect to its form and contents;⁹⁸

but irregularities in the application have been held merely formal or waived, or at least not fatally prejudicial to the parties opposing the application where the board was unquestionably familiar with the circumstances and the parties were given, and took, advantage of the opportunity at a hearing to present evidence.⁹⁹ Although orderly practice requires that an application for a variance be in writing, the board may consider an oral application where the ordinance does not expressly require a written application.¹ Exact terminology is not required,² and an application which really calls for a special exception rather than a variance will be so treated, even though the language of the application does not use the term "special exception" or "variance,"³ or although the applicant misnames the relief sought as a "variance,"⁴ at least where the

Attack on validity distinguished

Application for favor of a variance of restrictions of a zoning ordinance is distinguished from an attack on validity of ordinance in that former is an appeal primarily to discretion of board of standards and appeals conferred on it by ordinance and necessarily assumes validity of ordinance while a successful attack on validity of a zoning ordinance destroys foundation of any discretion conferred on administrative board by ordinance.

Inconsistent theories

An application for variance from zoning ordinance based on theory of continuation of nonconforming use and on variance from strict adherence to ordinance is improper, since the theories are irreconcilable, but such inconsistency was not fatal where testimony was fully taken by respective parties on both theories and both theories were fully argued. misnomer was not prejudicial to the parties.⁵

The application should ordinarily specify the provision of the statute or ordinance under which relief is sought,⁶ and where applicant fails to allege under what provision of the ordinance, if any, he should be granted an exception, his application can be treated as one for a variance only.⁷ An application to be relieved from lot coverage restrictions must be treated as one for a variance rather than an exception where there is no provision in the zoning ordinance for an exception as to such lot coverage restrictions.⁸

It has been held that an application which seeks relief which is available only by way of an amendment of the zoning ordinance is not effective to invoke the jurisdiction of the board,⁹ but it has also been held that a petition for an amendment of the zoning ordinance may be treated as an application for a variance.¹⁰

Amendment. In a proper case, the board may suggest and permit an amendment of the application.¹¹

§ 297. Consent or Approval

Under an ordinance authorizing the city council after a public hearing and after recommendation from a board or commission to grant variances in certain circumstances, the commission need not recommend approval before the council may act, but it is only necessary that the council approve or disapprove the variance on a de novo hearing after the commission has passed on the matter.

Under a zoning ordinance authorizing the city council after a public hearing and proper notice to all persons affected, and after recommendation from the city plan commission to grant variances in certain circumstances, the commission need not recommend approval of the project before the council may act, but it is only necessary that the council approve or disapprove the variance on a de novo hearing after the commission has passed on the matter.¹²

cil may act, but it is only necessary that the council approve or disapprove the variance on a de novo hearing after the commission has passed on the matter.¹² In proceedings before the council on a recommendation for a variance, it is the duty of the municipal attorney to recommend to the council the remand of the matter to the recommending board where the findings or proofs in the record in support of the recommendation of the board are deficient.¹³

§ 298. — Adjacent Property Owners

An applicant for a variance or exception must comply with zoning provisions requiring him to file consents of adjacent property owners.

An applicant for a variance or exception must comply with zoning provisions requiring him to file with the board consents of adjacent property owners,¹⁴ and in the absence of compliance therewith the petitioner is not entitled to invoke the board's discretion to grant him an exception.¹⁵ The paper containing such consents must, when the ordinance so provides, be acknowledged by the signers,¹⁶ and when the consent of the owners of a stated per cent of the area of all the lands within a designated distance of the proposed business use or structure is required, the paper must clearly and unequivocally state that the signers own that amount of property.¹⁷

§ 299. Who May Apply

Ordinarily, any property owner who claims to be unreasonably restricted by a zoning regulation may apply for a variance.

A landowner who honestly believes that he will be unnecessarily or unreasonably restricted in the use of his land by literal enforcement of a regulation is entitled to apply for a variance or exception as a matter of right,¹⁸ and he may apply for a variance which will be for the benefit of a conditional purchaser.¹⁹ The equitable owner of the property under a contract to purchase is entitled to apply for a variance,²⁰ special exception, or permit,²¹ even though his contract for the purchase of the property is conditioned on the grant of the relief sought.²² One may also make application for a variance as agent of the holder of the legal title.²³ Thus, the owner of all of the stock of a corporation which holds the legal title to the property may apply for a variance as the equitable owner or as agent of the owner.²⁴ from a zoning ordinance,²⁵ and one without any incident to ownership in the property may not apply for a variance.²⁶ A lessee has sufficient interest to apply for a variance;²⁷ but a person who holds an option to purchase the property involved,²⁸ or who merely intends to submit a bid for it,²⁹ does not have a sufficient interest.

Uncompleted contract of sale

Where there is an uncompleted contract of sale, the legal owner may be permitted to intervene in proceedings instituted by the purchaser.
Pa.—Elvan v. Exley, 58 Pa. Dist. & Co. 538.

Effect of application by former owner

Fact that predecessor in title of owner of realty used for dairy purposes made an allegedly erroneous application for variance under city's zoning ordinance, was not a waiver of any right of owner of realty thereafter to make application for alteration of cowbarn to convert it into a building for a pasteurizing, bottling, and distributing plant.

Waiver

Board of commissioners

Where parties opposed to granting of permit for use of property as funeral home in restricted district had their day before zoning board and proofs sustained result, failure of board of commissioners to give notice or to conduct a hearing before approving zoning board's recommendation that permit be granted was not error, in absence of request therefor.

however, variances and exceptions should not be granted unless full and adequate notice has been given to all interested persons,³¹ and under some provisions the giving of adequate notice is jurisdictional.³² Notice is required so that all interested parties may be advised of their opportunity to be heard and to be apprised of the relief sought.³³ The failure of the statute or ordinance to require notice does not invalidate a grant of a variance where the board adopted a rule providing for notice, and all interested persons actually received notice.³⁴

Failure to give direct notice to adjoining landowners of an adjourned hearing may not be fatal,³⁵ and it may be unnecessary to give notice of a hearing which is merely for the purpose of correcting a clerical error in a resolution of the board granting a variance.³⁶

Time of giving notice. A requirement that the notice given shall be reasonable is implicit in a requirement of public notice,³⁷ and what is a reasonable time for notification to result in notice is dependent on the circumstances surrounding the particular transaction.³⁸ In computing whether or not the statutory number of days of notice was given by a notice published in a newspaper, it is the day on which the paper is made available to the public, and not the date appearing on the paper, which marks the time of giving notice.³⁹

To whom notice must be given. Under some statutes and ordinances notice should be given to the owners of property affected in the area by a desired variance.⁴⁰ Under a city charter provision that due notice of the hearing shall be given to the "parties," neighboring landowners are not "parties" within the meaning of the provision.⁴¹ Under a statute to such effect, the board itself must determine the persons entitled to notice and give such notice in the manner prescribed;⁴² and these duties cannot be delegated to the petitioner.⁴³

§ 301. — Form and Requisites

§ 303. Hearing

As a general rule, it is a prerequisite to valid action on an application for a variance or exception, that there be a hearing, on due notice, at which proof may be presented of the circumstances or conditions affecting the right of the applicant to the relief sought.

As a general rule, a hearing, on due notice, is a prerequisite to valid action on an application for a variance permit⁵⁵ unless the necessity of such a hearing is dispensed with by the terms of the statute;⁵⁶ but where an application for a variance is precisely the same as that involved in a prior application previously disposed of by the board, and the second application shows no change of circumstances, the board is not required to hold another public hearing on the second application.⁵⁷ Requirements of a statute or ordinance must be complied with in order to render a hearing valid;⁵⁸ and it may be necessary that a record be kept of the proceedings, including a report of the evidence, as discussed infra § 313. The failure of interested persons to appear does not affect the validity of the hearing.⁵⁹

Under a statute requiring official action by the zoning board to be taken at a meeting open to the public, action taken by the board at an executive session with the public excluded has been held void,⁶⁰ and such illegality is not cured by a subsequent announcement of the decision at a public meeting.⁶¹ Ordinarily, however, where a public hearing on a zoning variance application is held, the fact that the board thereafter considered the case in private conference is immaterial,⁶² and it may meet after the public hearing, without the attendance of counsel for interested parties, in order to discuss and render its opinion on the matter, since such a meeting is not a hearing or rehearing of the matter on the merits.⁶³

The hearing on an application for a variance may be informal,⁶⁴ and technical rules of evidence and procedure may be disregarded;⁶⁵ but ordinarily no

Adoption of statements of counsel

Where counsel for applicant for permit to establish parking lot for physicians and their employees on property where physicians' offices were located made unsworn statement of situation to board of municipal and zoning appeals, and two physicians were then called, who adopted counsel's statement, physicians were subject to cross-examination on any statements made by counsel, and method of procedure was not to be commended as a general proposition.

element essential to a fair trial can be dispensed with,⁶⁶ and one whose property rights are being determined usually must be given the opportunity to present evidence, cross-examine witnesses, and inspect documents.⁶⁷ According to some authority, however, unless it is otherwise provided by statute or ordinance, it is not always necessary that witnesses be heard⁶⁸ or sworn⁶⁹ at hearings. So, it has been held that, provided there is a sufficient basis for the board's action, it is not essential that there be testimony or that documents or exhibits be received in evidence;⁷⁰ and where there is no dispute over the facts and they are well known to the board and all the parties, the board may act on an application for a zoning variance without taking testimony or making a formal inspection of the site.⁷¹

a personal investigation of the property in question to inform themselves of the facts,⁷² and in reaching their decision they may take into consideration facts within their personal knowledge,⁷³ as with respect to practical difficulties and unnecessary hardship as a basis for a variance.⁷⁴ However, such facts and personal knowledge should be revealed at the hearing,⁷⁵ and set forth in the record, as discussed infra § 313; and persons interested should be afforded an opportunity to present argument or evidence as to such matters.⁷⁶

Ordinarily, questions not raised by the application will not be considered.⁷⁷

Irregularities in the hearing, which are merely formal, may be waived, at least where they are not fatally prejudicial and all the parties presented evidence for and against the application.⁷⁸

Reason for rule

Primary purpose of the hearing is to assist the zoning board of review of the city in discharging its duty of determining whether the granting of the exception is consistent with preservation of common interests and general welfare as contemplated by zoning ordinance, and not to test strength of conflicting personal desires and interests, or to poll the neighborhood on question involved. R.I.—Jacques v. As denial of day in court

Where record did not indicate that prosecutors offered themselves as witnesses or requested that they be sworn at proceedings before board, prosecutors were not denied their day in court on theory that no witnesses were sworn or heard on their behalf before board.

§ 304. — Bias or Disqualification of Member

A member of a zoning board should not, in matters affecting applications for exceptions or variances, say or do anything which would furnish a basis for an inference that he was biased in favor of one side or the other, or participate in the hearing or determination of the application if he is interested in the property which is the subject of the application.

A member of a zoning board should not, in any matter affecting the granting or denying of applications for exceptions or variances, say or do anything which would furnish a basis for raising an inference that he was biased in favor of one side or the other,⁷⁹ and should not participate in the hearing or determination of the application if he is interested in the property which is the subject of the application.⁸⁰ So, it is imperative, in order that the zoning board be free from suspicion of prejudice or partiality, that interested parties refrain from approaching any member of the board privately; and the only legitimate way for anyone to influence or persuade the board in making its decision is to make his opinions known at the hearing.⁸¹

The interest which disqualifies a member is a personal or private one, not such an interest as he has in common with all other citizens or owners of property.⁸² A decision will not be invalidated because of the interest of one of the board members who, on being challenged, voluntarily withdrew from further participation in the proceedings, took no part in the deliberations or vote, and in no manner influenced the decision of the other members of the board;⁸³ and a remote relationship to counsel for the applicants has been held not ground for disqualification of a member of the board.⁸⁴

Objection to the participation of a board member claimed to be biased or interested should be made promptly;⁸⁵ but one may be justified in reserving his objection until he can show by corroborative evidence that the member of the board had actually made certain statements, indicating prejudgment of the application for a variance, imputed to him by another.⁸⁶

§ 305. Evidence

The evidence presented to, or considered by, the board should be competent and relevant, but it need not be of the same character as that required for presentation to a court.

While the evidence presented to, or considered by, the board should be competent and relevant,⁸⁷ it need not be of the same character as that which would be required for presentation to a court.⁸⁸

Interest as lessee

Where member of borough council sold realty retaining right, as lessee, to use garage on premises for about three years, he should have disqualified himself when council voted on question of grant of variance to purchaser, and where such member participated in voting without disqualifying himself, entire procedure was voidable.

Relationship of brother of uncle by marriage

Records and exhibits of earlier hearing

Zoning board's action in admitting records and exhibits from earlier hearing on same subject, even though objected to, did not constitute such error as would vitiate board's action in granting exception to zoning ordinance.

men may act.³ The rule that insufficient evidence is no evidence applies before the zoning board in a proceeding to obtain a variance just as it does in a court of law.⁴

An informal discussion is not a substitute for competent and credible evidence in support of an application for a zoning variance.⁵ Statements of counsel in the proceeding before the board ordinarily are not evidence,⁶ although they may in some circumstances be accepted as such;⁷ and recitals in an application for a building permit and assertions in the brief of counsel do not have the status of proofs that the applicant is entitled to a variance.⁸

In particular cases, the evidence has been held sufficient to warrant or support the granting of a variance or exception,⁹ to warrant or support the denial of a variance or exception,¹⁰ to sustain the

§ 308. Determination

The determination by the board need not contain formal findings or set forth the reasons for the decision, except to the extent required by statute or ordinance.

In the absence of a provision so requiring, neither formal findings¹⁶ nor a statement of reasons¹⁷ is required to be incorporated in or accompany the determination of the board on an application for a variance so as to render it valid.¹⁸ However, under some statutes the board is expressly required to set forth the facts, findings, or reasons on which its action is based,¹⁹ and, under some statutes, since the board cannot grant a variance without finding the necessary conditions to exist,²⁰ it is required to

Sufficiency of statement

Mere repetition of the general language of the statute adds nothing to the power of the board of appeals to render a decision varying the application of zoning law, but there must be a definite statement of rational causes and motives, founded on adequate findings.

Mass.—Gaunt v. Board of Appeals of Methuen, 99 N.E.2d 60, 327 Mass. 380—Real Properties v. Board of Appeal of Boston, 65 N.E.2d 199, 319 Mass. 180—Brockett v. Board of Appeal of Building Department of City of Boston, 39 N.E.2d 956, 311 Mass. 52.

Decision held invalid

Where board of appeals granted special permit to vary zoning bylaws and to subdivide lot as indicated by plan, and only records filed by board with town clerk were its decision and plan, and no other records were in existence, requirements of statute, which authorized variation of zoning bylaws, were not complied with, and board's decision was invalid.

Report of testimony

Even though there is a stenographic or otherwise substantial report of testimony, supreme court will not speculate as to grounds on which the board bases its decision, especially where board has taken into consideration information which allegedly was within its own knowledge or secured from outside sources but of which not even the substance is disclosed in record brought up for review.

state its findings²¹ and to specify its reasons²² for granting a variance.

Nevertheless, under a statute of the latter character the board need not expressly set forth its reasons for approving the application, at least where its resolution impliedly finds that the variance sought will not be contrary to the popular interest;²³ nor need the board in denying the variance specify any reasons for its action,²⁴ or suggest what uses would be approved.²⁵

Where the board bases its decision on a view of the location involved, it has been held that it must set forth what it found on such view to justify its action;²⁶ and where the board acts on its own knowledge it should set forth in its findings and decision the facts which are known to it and which form the basis of such decision but which are not otherwise disclosed in the record.²⁷

Dismissal of a petition for a variance or exception is equivalent to a nonsuit,²⁸ and such an order has been held void.²⁹

vote must be recorded as required⁸¹ and show that the required number of members voted in favor of the resolution granting the variance.⁸² A requirement that the vote of each member of the board on the application must be shown merely requires a showing of the vote on the ultimate question whether the variance permit should be granted, and it is not necessary that the vote on each incidental claim of applicant be shown.⁸³

Although a board member may not make a judicial determination with respect to an application for a zoning variance without knowledge of the material evidence,⁸⁴ the mere fact that one member of the board who voted for the variance, and whose vote was necessary to pass the resolution granting the variance, was not present during the public hearing of the application for the variance, at which no testimony was taken, and had not read the transcript of the proceedings does not invalidate the proceeding where he actually had full knowledge of the problems presented by the request for the variance and had considered the matters aired at the public hearing before casting his vote.⁸⁵

§ 310. — Conditions

A variance may be granted on stated conditions which must be reasonable, and not arbitrary, unnecessary, or oppressive; and under some statutes an exception may be granted only under appropriate conditions and safeguards.

Who must be present

Under zoning statute providing that no variance of application of zoning act should be authorized except by unanimous decision of entire membership of board of appeal rendered after a public hearing, all members of board are required to be present at public hearing, and, where one of members was ill and not present at hearing even though he read record of testimony, visited premises, and participated in decision, and objecting party consented to such procedure, there was no public hearing by "entire membership of board" as required by statute, and board was without jurisdiction to act.

N.Y.—Northport Water Works Co. v. Carll, 133 N.Y.S.2d 859.

Termination of right to continue variance

Where an antique dealer who has been granted a variance under a zoning ordinance to conduct a shop in a residence leased by her for term of lease, purchases property, right to continue variance is terminated by its very terms.

Pa.—Cummer v. Narberth Borough Bd. of Adjustment, 59 Pa. Dist. & Co. 686, 63 Montg. Co. 247.

Estoppel to object

A party who has accepted and retained advantages of an order of zoning board of appeal granting variation from construction and use requirement of property cannot be heard to attack validity or propriety of conditions upon which its right to such advantages was expressly predicated, and by accepting advantages of variation he has waived whatever error may have existed in imposing conditions upon which variation was granted.

Ill.—Zweifel Mfg. Corp. v. City of Peoria, 144 N.E.2d 593, 11 Ill.2d 489.

should do so,³⁷ although it may not reserve to itself the right to modify or revoke the privilege granted on violation of the condition.³⁸ Where a variance is granted on condition that certain requirements be complied with or certain alterations made, the variance is not effective until such conditions are met;³⁹ nevertheless, if applicant, although he has not fully complied with the conditions, has made substantial progress toward compliance within the prescribed time, the board may in its discretion grant an extension of time,⁴⁰ and the failure of applicant to comply within the prescribed time does not invalidate the grant or empower the board to reverse its original order.⁴¹

Conditions imposed must be reasonable, not arbitrary, unnecessary, or oppressive,⁴² or beyond the jurisdiction of the board to impose;⁴³ and unreasonable conditions may be stricken by the court.⁴⁴ The proper way to raise the question whether the condition has been violated is to petition the building inspector for an order forbidding improper use of the premises;⁴⁵ and it is likewise proper for the board, on an application to determine the propriety of the issuance of a variance permit, to consider whether the conditions imposed with the granting of the variance should be dispensed with or have been complied with.⁴⁶

Under a statute expressly providing that exceptions may be granted subject to appropriate conditions and safeguards, the conditions must be such as under all the circumstances of any given case are fit, suitable, and proper;⁴⁷ such conditions and safeguards are placed on the use of the premises and run with the land,⁴⁸ and for that reason they should be specifically and separately enumerated.⁴⁹ Where a condition is invalid, and such condition

Conformity to precedent

A condition imposed in a variance does not have to conform to any precedent.

Pa.—Springfield Tp. v. Flourbowl, Inc., 7 Pa.Dist. & Co.2d 28, 72 Montg.Co. 304.

Conditions held reasonable or valid

(1) Where building zone ordinance of town empowered zoning board of appeals to attach conditions to a variance, rule adopted by board limiting validity of special exception or variance granted to one year from date of order, unless within that period applicant has applied for building permit and has commenced construction or use or has obtained an extension, is valid.

N.Y.—Ambrosio v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Town of Huntington, 96 N.Y.S.2d 380, 196 Misc. 1005.

(2) Action of a zoning board in requiring as a condition to grant of a variance to permit an eight-lane bowling alley that a paved parking area be provided for thirty cars is reasonable, and is not satisfied by spreading a three-quarter inch surface of loose stone over lot, since "paved" means a hard, smooth, prepared surface.

Pa.—Springfield Tp. v. Flourbowl, Inc., 7 Pa.Dist. & Co.2d 28, 72 Montg.Co. 304.

(3) Even though there is no ordinance on subject, requiring a variance permittee to pave his accessory parking lot is not an unreasonable or discriminatory condition merely because other businesses which have accessory parking lots have not likewise been required to pave.

Pa.—Springfield Tp. v. Flourbowl, Inc., supra.

Retroactive application

Rule adopted by zoning board of appeals of town limiting validity of special exception or variance from terms of building zone ordinance to period of one year from date of order, unless within that period applicant has applied for building permit, and has commenced construction or use, or has obtained an extension, could be applied retroactively to a variance previously granted.

was the chief factor in the granting of the exception, the exception must fail.⁵⁰

§ 311. — Filing, Notice, or Service

A report of the proceedings and decision must be filed, and notice of the decision mailed to interested parties, when required by statute, but personal service is not necessary in the absence of statutory requirement.

Where so required by statute, a report of the proceedings and decision must be filed in the proper manner,⁵¹ and notice of the decision must be mailed to each party in interest.⁵² Personal service of the decision has been held not necessary when not required by statute.⁵³ The failure to file the decision is not ground for vacating it where the persons petitioning for review were not deprived of access to, or knowledge of, the decision.⁵⁴

§ 312. — Conclusiveness and Effect

The decision of the board on an application for a variance or exception is generally final and binding until set aside in a proper manner.

Under an appropriate provision of a zoning code, the decision of the board on an application for a variance may be made final.⁵⁵ Even in the absence of such a provision, the action of the board within its jurisdiction and in the absence of fraud or other abuse is valid, final, and binding until set aside in a proper manner;⁵⁶ but such decision is not res judicata,⁵⁷ at least as to matters not directly in issue.⁵⁸ Where the practice is for the board

Owners failing to give notice to board
Where property owners did not give notice to board of zoning adjustment of any desire to be considered parties to proceedings for granting a variance in zoning ordinance, they could not complain of lack of notice of decision of board in granting variance under statute requiring notice to be given to all parties in interest.

Indirect attack

Where decision of board granting a zoning variance became final on failure of anyone to institute a proceeding to review board's decision within statutory time limit, a second proceeding seeking an order directing board formally to deny the original zoning variance on ground that conditions imposed by board in its decision had not been fully complied with was an attempt to obtain indirectly the relief which could not be obtained directly, and would not be allowed.

N.Y.—Fleischer v. Murdock, 62 N.Y. S.2d 417, appeal dismissed, A.D., 77 N.Y.S.2d 393.

Deception

Party seeking to uphold grant of variance by board of adjustment based in part on building inspector's approval of construction can derive no advantage from approval of construction gained by deception.

Issues not concluded

The denial of a property owner's application for a variation of the zoning resolution does not constitute binding adjudication that without such variation enforcement of general rule would deprive owner of his property without due process of law, notwithstanding courts on review by certiorari sustain the determination of the board denying variation.

of adjustment to recommend to the governing body that the application for a variance be granted, if on such recommendation the governing body refuses to approve the application, the application falls, and such refusal cannot be set aside except on adequate grounds.⁵⁹

A variance for the use of property in a particular manner is not personal to the owner at the time of the grant, but is available to any subsequent owner, until it expires according to its terms or is effectively revoked,⁶⁰ and this is true even though the original owner did not act on it.⁶¹ Where no appeal is taken from the denial of a petition for a variance, the findings and rulings on hardship and on the effect of the present use on the values of surrounding properties are significant only as they relate to the issue of public need.⁶²

§ 313. Record

It is generally necessary that a proper record be kept of the proceedings on an application for a variance, and such record must be made and filed in the manner prescribed by statute.

As a general rule, it is necessary that a record be kept of the proceedings on an application for a variance,⁶³ and such record must be made and filed in the manner prescribed by statute.⁶⁴ Ordinarily, the record must contain a résumé of the evidence,⁶⁵ and, even apart from any statutory requirement, it has been held that the regard accorded to the proceedings is considerably enhanced where a stenographic record is made;⁶⁶ but where the record contains a summary of the testimony, and sets forth in general terms the grounds for the board's decision, the failure of the board to keep a stenographic record of the proceedings is not error.⁶⁷

Where the board acts on the basis of matters within the personal knowledge of its members, such facts should be set forth in the record.⁶⁸

§ 314. Reconsideration or Revocation; New Application

The board will not ordinarily review its own decision on an application for a variance or exception or revoke action once taken thereon; but variances may be revoked entirely when no vested rights have accrued, and the board may entertain a new application based on different facts.

In conformity with the general rules as to the power of a board of appeals and adjustment to review its own prior decisions, as discussed supra § 218, it is the general rule that such a board will ordinarily not be permitted to review its own decision on an application for a variance or exception and revoke action once taken thereon,⁶⁹ at least in the absence of a mistake in the prior proceedings,⁷⁰ or of new evidence or additional facts,⁷¹ or a change in circumstances;⁷² and this is particularly true

Discretion of board

(1) A board of zoning appeals may exercise a liberal discretion in deciding on a new application, whether to reverse earlier decision.

Conn.—Spencer v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 104 A.2d 373, 141 Conn. 155.

after certiorari proceedings have been instituted.⁷³ So, under a statute providing that no new petition for reclassification or special exception shall be entertained in any case which has been considered and acted on until the expiration of a specified time from the date of the final order thereon, an application for special exception will not be entertained within the statutory time from the denial of a petition for reclassification.⁷⁴

Variances may be revoked entirely, however, when no vested rights have accrued,⁷⁵ and even after a permit has been issued.⁷⁶ Furthermore, the board may entertain a new application based on different or additional facts and make a new determination,⁷⁷ even aside from a statute specifically providing that the board of appeals may review any order, decision, or determination which it has not previously reviewed.⁷⁸ A board of appeals has jurisdiction to reach a decision contrary to that reached on a previous application for similar relief,⁷⁹ and the mere fact that the board grants an application for a variance which it had previously denied does not ipso facto show bad faith or arbitrary action.⁸⁰ A new board has been held to have the power to review the action of a prior board provided it exercises such power within the statutory time allotted within which to appeal to the courts.⁸¹

If the board has power to rescind its prior decision, it cannot legally do so without giving the applicants for the variance notice of the proceeding to reconsider.⁸²

Revocation of a variance previously granted by a city council was held arbitrary and capricious where three of the five members of the council were disqualified to vote on the revocation ordinance because they were biased and prejudiced and had determined in advance of hearings to vote for the revocation or because they had not heard the evidence

(2) Reversal of action of zoning board of adjustment in granting a certificate of variance in belief that, since premises had previously been used in a given manner, board was required to permit a resumption of such nonconforming use regardless of time which had elapsed during which use was discontinued, did not constitute a holding that board acted arbitrarily so as to preclude subsequent grant of a variance in exercise of board's discretion.

Question for board

Whether there is such a change of facts or circumstances as to justify a rehearing on matter of granting of variance and authorization of issuance of building permit is primarily for determination of zoning board of appeals of municipality on application for rehearing.

Subsequent purchase of property

Fact that owner of realty purchased it after board of adjustment of city had denied his first application for a variance of zoning ordinance, although not an absolute bar to relief on his second application for a variance, was a material element which board properly considered.

presented and one of the two remaining members voted against the ordinance;⁸³ and where the ordinance granting the variance thus attempted to be revoked reserved the right to revoke them after regular public hearings, such attempt to revoke was also invalid as made without the required public hearing.⁸⁴ In the absence of compliance with provisions of the zoning law requiring that notice be given and hearings held as to the possible effect of a proposed zoning law on property rights, an ordinance adopted by the electors of a city revoking variances is void.⁸⁵

§ 315. Review

An administrative review of proceedings for a variance may be had when authorized by the zoning laws.

The right of appeal by the applicant or any party aggrieved by the decision of an administrative body on an application for a variance is governed by controlling statutory provisions.⁸⁶ Thus, an administrative review may be had where provision is made therefor by the zoning laws,⁸⁷ as where statutes provide for an appeal from the decision of the board of appeals to the state emergency housing commission.⁸⁸ Judicial review of proceedings before the board is treated infra § 329.

E. VARIANCES FOR GARAGES, FILLING STATIONS, AND PARKING LOTS

§ 316. In General

In a proper case, a variance or exception may be granted from a regulation prohibiting or restricting the construction of, or use of property for, a service station, garage, or parking lot.

In accordance with the general rules, as discussed supra §§ 268-315, a variance or exception from a regulation prohibiting or restricting the construction of, or use of property for, a service station, garage, or parking lot in a particular manner or place may be granted in a proper case,⁸⁹ as where literal enforcement of the regulation will result in unnecessary hardship.⁹⁰

A variance should not be granted merely because use of the property for a service station, garage, or parking lot will be more convenient or profitable to the owner, or because he will suffer some financial disadvantage or hardship if denied such use;⁹¹ it is essential that applicant should suffer some unusual hardship from the literal enforcement of the regulation different from, and greater than, that suffered by other property owners in the district.⁹² The

Off-street parking

(1) A plan for off-street parking in crowded area of city to relieve traffic congestion is adequate ground for granting variance from zoning ordinance, and lack of street parking space for demands of business establishments in crowded area of city and traffic congestion therein constituted special reasons, for which city board of adjustment could validly recommend that city board of commissioners grant requested variance from city zoning ordinance to permit savings and loan association to establish restricted noncommercial parking area in residential district behind association's building in business zone on finding that variance could be granted without substantial detriment to public good and that proposed use of land would not substantially impair intent and purpose of zone plan and ordinance.

The board is empowered to grant a variance or exception for the use of property for a garage, filling station, or parking lot only on proof of the existence of necessary conditions;⁵ and the burden of proof is on the applicant,⁶ who must persuade the board of the specific presence of each of the prerequisites by a preponderance of the evidence.⁷ The determination of whether those conditions are present is primarily a matter for the board⁸ which must give due consideration to all the factors bearing on the question.⁹

With respect to application for permission to erect and maintain gaso-

Under some provisions the board is under no obligation to grant an exception to permit the operation of a filling station under a zoning ordinance unless the application sets forth the particular section relied on,¹⁰ but where the application and the evidence make it clear that the applicant is seeking an exception under a particular provision of the ordinance, the board is not precluded from making pertinent findings and, if proper, granting the application as one for such exception.¹¹

Right to open and close hearing. The board did no injustice to the parties resisting the application in compelling them to open the hearing before the board where it also permitted them to close.¹²

§ 319. — Determination

In granting a variance or exception for the construction of, or use of property for, a filling station, garage, or parking lot, reasonable conditions may, and sometimes must, be imposed.

In granting a variance or exception for the construction of, or use of property for, a filling station, garage, or parking lot, the board may¹³ or must¹⁴ impose reasonable conditions, and granting such permission without imposing conditions or safeguards is improper.¹⁵ However, a body having no authority to grant a variance cannot, in granting a permit which it is required to grant under the circumstances, attach thereto an unauthorized condition under the guise of a variance permit.¹⁶

Reconsideration. An application for a variance once denied may be reopened on a showing of a change of circumstances sufficient to justify the determination of the board to reopen it.¹⁷

IX. JUDICIAL REVIEW OR RELIEF

A. IN GENERAL

§ 320. General Principles

Generally, judicial review may be had of the validity of municipal zoning and building regulations, and of the exercise of power by zoning boards or officers, as with respect to applications for variances, exceptions, and permits; and the courts have power to grant relief in appropriate proceedings against zoning which is unreasonable, discriminatory, unconstitutional, or otherwise invalid.

While municipal zoning and building regulations are a legislative, not a judicial, matter, as discussed supra § 5, they are subject to judicial review as to their validity,¹⁸ and an opportunity for appeal to line service station in residential district, presence of milk plant and grocery store in vicinity, both of which commercial plants existed before enactment of zoning ordinance, did not justify departure from a general plan of municipal development established by zoning ordinance.

Restrictions Improper

Municipal zoning regulations giving zoning board authority to attach to a granted special exception appropriate conditions and safeguards in accordance with public interest and comprehensive plan set forth in regulations and in harmony with purpose and intent thereof did not empower board, in granting special exception authorizing property owner to use a lot in business zone for automobile salesroom and repair garage, to restrict amount of permissive parking on such lot, where comprehensive plan of zoning as set forth in regulations was to take parking off streets and general purpose and intent of regulations was lessening of congestion in streets.

the courts must be given on the question whether the restriction is justified under the police power.¹⁹ Accordingly, the courts have power to grant relief in appropriate proceedings against zoning which is unreasonable, discriminatory, unconstitutional, or otherwise invalid,²⁰ and a court on review has the duty to annul a zoning order or regulation which is invalid.²¹ It has been held, however, that in the absence of statutes authorizing such appeals, a court is without jurisdiction to consider an appeal from the order of a city zoning body amending or refusing to amend zoning regulations,²² even though no board of adjustment from which the statute authorizes an appeal to the courts was ever appointed.²³

Ill.—Illinois Bell Tel. Co. v. Fox, 85 N.E.2d 43, 403 Ill. 617.

Review of order distinguished

An action to review a decision of the board of zoning adjustment differs from an action to review an order of the zoning commission in that latter suit involves the question of whether the property has been taken without due process of law.

D.C.—O'Boyle v. Coe, D.C., 155 F. Supp. 581.

Reversal of earlier decision

While a board of zoning appeals may exercise a liberal discretion in set aside for errors of law.²⁵ A zoning ordinance is not invalid because it fails to provide for an appeal from, or review of, the planning commission's findings where review of the findings may be obtained by a writ of certiorari.²⁶

The action of boards of appeal or adjustment in passing on applications for exceptions or variances is subject to review by the courts,²⁷ provided the determination below is final and of a nature subject to review,²⁸ and relief will be granted in a deciding, on a new application, whether to reverse earlier decision, its decision is subject to judicial review on question of whether it has exercised its discretion in a reasonable and legal way and on evidence which fairly sustains its actions.

Conn.—Spencer v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 104 A.2d 373, 141 Conn. 155.

Decisions reviewable

(1) Appeal to superior court from decision of board of zoning appeals was not restricted to cases where the board had exercised its authority in acting on an appeal to it from a decision or ruling of the building inspector, and appeal could be taken from its denial of petition addressed directly to it, unless the action sought by such petition was entirely beyond the board's powers.

Conn.—Kelley v. Board of Zoning Appeals of New Haven, 13 A.2d 675, 126 Conn. 648.

(2) Recommendation of board of adjustment for modification of zoning ordinance, there being no judgment, is not reviewable.

N.Y.—Stanley v. Board of Appeals of Village of Piermont, 5 N.Y.S.2d 956, 168 Misc. 797.

(5) Where city solicitor acted on instructions from zoning officer in notifying billboard advertising firm to remove its signboards before effective date of zoning ordinance, such notification constituted decision of an "administrative officer," for purposes of statutory review by appeal.

Standards for exercise of judgment

Decision of board of appeals that in its judgment public convenience and welfare will be substantially served by granting an exception to zoning ordinance is subject to judicial review, even though ordinance states few or no express standards for exercise of such judgment.

Mass.—Lawrence v. Board of Appeals of Lynn, 142 N.E.2d 378.

Decisions held subject to appeal

(1) Whatever terminology was employed by zoning board of adjustment and whatever was the legal effect of board's action, practical effect of board's vote to grant exception to ordinance and its subsequent order granting such exception, was a decision from which property owners had a right to appeal.

Pa.—Blank v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of West Mifflin, 136 A. 2d 695, 390 Pa. 636.

(2) Where zoning board of adjustment lacked jurisdiction to enter into contract granting special exception on condition to zoning regulations and action of board did not constitute inquiry and adjudication within statutory limits, resolution of board purporting to authorize exception was utterly void and subject to collateral attack at any time as well as direct review within time prescribed by law.

N.J.—V. F. Zahodiakin Engineering Corp. v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of City of Summit, 86 A.2d 127, 8 N. J. 386.

Provision rendering decision final

A provision of a zoning code that, when an application for a variance is passed on by the board of directors, its decision shall be final could not be attacked on appeal from refusal of the board to grant a variance; but such a provision may be attacked in a judicial proceeding as unconstitutional as applied to particular property, and the denial of the application to secure a variance is not "res judicata" in such a proceeding, notwithstanding the same type of evidence may be used in such proceeding as was presented to zoning committee and board of directors in support of application to secure a variance.

Cal.—Rubin v. Board of Directors of City of Pasadena, 104 P.2d 1041, 16 C.2d 119.

28. Pa.—Hinton v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, 86 Pa.Dist. & Co. 192.

Number of votes

Where four affirmative votes are necessary for approval of an application for a variance by virtue of statute and only three members of a six-member zoning board voted on the application, there has been no sufficient disposition of the case by the proper case, where the board has exceeded its powers.²⁹ Similarly, the action of a zoning board with respect to an application for a permit is subject to challenge and review by the courts.³⁰ So, in a proper case a proceeding may be brought to review the granting of a permit;³¹ and where the grant of a permit is within the discretion of the board of appeal, its exercise of that discretion in granting a permit is subject to review.³² Under some statutes, however, it is held that there is no appeal from the granting of a permit or from a decision purporting to affirm such grant.³³

§ 321. Right of Review and Persons Entitled Thereto

An owner of property is entitled to direct access to the courts to litigate the question of the reasonableness and validity of a zoning ordinance or regulation, and persons aggrieved by any decision of a zoning board or officer may obtain judicial review thereof in proceedings properly instituted for this purpose.

As a general rule, an owner of property is entitled to direct access to the courts for the purpose of litigating the question whether or not a zoning ordinance is unreasonable, arbitrary, or discriminatory,³⁴ regardless of whether or not the zoning board to permit an appeal from its action to the courts.

Pa.—Hinton v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment, supra.

Pending determination of validity of zoning change

An appeal from order of board of zoning appeals denying trucking company's application for permission to erect addition to its building would not be determined where validity of change in zoning regulation, on basis of which application was denied, was not determined, and appeal was continued on docket of supreme court of errors until determination of validity of change and further action by parties with reference to it.

Pa.—Root v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of City of Erie, 38 Erie Co. 212, affirmed 118 A.2d 297, 180 Pa.Super. 38.

Use of unauthorized standard

While court cannot substitute its judgment for that of city zoning board within such board's sphere of action unless action of board is arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable, board acts beyond its sphere of action and so can be corrected by court when board uses unauthorized standard for determining unnecessary hardship as ground for variance from zoning ordinance.

of Public Works of City of Paterson, 65 A.2d 748, 2 N.J. 131.

Basis of decision

Decision of zoning board with respect to grant or denial of variance will not be upheld where it is based on errors of law, or fraud, or where there is no legal evidence to support it, or where board acts arbitrarily, unreasonably or in a discriminatory manner, or where, in general, board has abused its discretion.

Final decision

Decision of board of adjustment which clearly showed that board reversed decision of general building inspector, and in effect granted building permit provided applicant would submit certain plans and specifications and give certain assurances as to construction of proposed building, was a final decision from which an appeal to the superior court would lie.

"Proper parties"

Property owners residing within residential use district in which property in dispute was originally classified were "proper parties" to suit attacking validity of amending ordinance has made provision therefor;³⁵ but under some statutes persons who are not real parties in interest are not entitled to maintain a review proceeding to litigate questions as to the validity or construction of zoning regulations.³⁶ Similarly, there may be a right of review of decisions by zoning boards, in proceedings properly instituted for this purpose.³⁷ So, a person aggrieved by a decision with respect to a permit or certificate for the construction, alteration, or use of a building may, on compliance with all conditions precedent, obtain a judicial review;³⁸ and a property owner whose application for a permit is denied, or whose permit, if he has been granted one, is revoked, may invoke the aid of the court to review the decision complained of and to prevent unreasonable denial or revocation of the permit;³⁹ regardless of whether provision is made for such remedy in a statute ordinance creating separate first commercial use district of lot in residential district, and praying for an injunction against use of property thereon as a funeral home.

Md.—Cassel v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 73 A.2d 486, 195 Md. 348.

Adjacent property

Owners of property near premises affected by relocation of dividing line of industrial zone by amendment of zoning ordinance had sufficient standing to bring a proceeding to determine validity of the amendment.

N.J.—Menges v. Bernards Tp., 73 A.2d 540, 4 N.J. 556.

Prior to specific action

If zoning bylaw was improperly amended, any party aggrieved was entitled at once to take appropriate steps to cause invalid amendment to be disregarded, and would not be forced to wait until some specific action was proposed or begun pursuant to it, such as issuance of building permit.

Approval of restaurant

Where planning and zoning board of town purported to change zone so that part of property was in light industrial zone and part in business zone, rather than in residence zone, but action was a nullity as to part of property zoned for business because hearing and publication of notice of hearing related only to petition for change to light industrial zone, and under regulations alcoholic liquors could be sold only in a business area, fact that plaintiff took no appeal from such action did not preclude plaintiff from appealing from action of board in approving a restaurant with full liquor license privileges on property purportedly rezoned to business.

Applicant not owner of property

Statute authorizing appeal to circuit court by any "person aggrieved" by decision of board of adjustment and appeals authorizes appeal by any one whose application for permit is refused, regardless of whether applicant owns property on which he seeks permission to establish business.

Ky.—Smith v. Selligman, 109 S.W.2d 14, 270 Ky. 69.

Effect of board's lack of jurisdiction

Under statute relating to jurisdiction of superior court on appeal from decision of board of appeals, where board of appeals had no authority to hear neighboring landowner's appeal from action of inspector granting an occupancy permit, superior court was not thereby deprived of jurisdiction to hear appeal from action of the board annulling the occupancy permit.

Mass.—Turner v. Board of Appeals of Town of Milton, 25 N.E.2d 203, 305 Mass. 189.

Validity of provision

Remedy provided in zoning law of appeal from denial of permit by board of adjustment to court was of uniform operation as respects validity of provision.

Pa.—Taylor v. Moore, 154 A. 799, 303 Pa. 469.

Waiver of right to question revocation

Parties filing another application for building permit, after one pre-

or ordinance.⁴⁰ Where an application to review a ruling is for the purpose of obtaining an opinion essentially of an advisory nature, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision therefor, the court has no jurisdiction to entertain such an application or proceeding.⁴¹

Limitation of right to persons aggrieved or affected. Statutes providing that persons aggrieved by any decision of the zoning board or commission may appeal to the court have been construed and applied in a number of cases,⁴² and have been held to authorize an aggrieved person to appeal from the action of the city council, since the board of adjustment is only an authorized arm or agency of the city council.⁴³ Under statutes of this nature, any aggrieved or interested person may appeal from a decision of a board of appeals or adjustment or a zoning commission,⁴⁴ and, on the other hand, the viously granted was revoked, waived question as to right to retain advantage gained by issue of original permit.

Remedy

Statute allowing the person aggrieved to appeal from a decision of the board of appeal of Boston granting a variance with respect to zoning regulations does no more than confer a remedy, and does not create in anyone arbitrary rights to interfere with the use of another's land.

Mass.—Circle Lounge & Grille v. Board of Appeal of Boston, 86 N.E. 2d 920, 324 Mass. 427.

Presumption

In proceeding for zoning variance, there is presumption that property owners to whom board, in performance of statutory obligation, has sent notice as persons "deemed by the board to be affected thereby," have an interest so as to be "persons aggrieved" of its decision, entitled to appeal to the superior court, under statutes, but if issue is contested and any additional evidence offered, jurisdiction is to be determined on all evidence with no benefit to plaintiff from presumption as such. Mass.—Marotta v. Board of Appeals of Revere, 143 N.E.2d 270.

Rezoning

Plaintiff who owned no property near area rezoned "commercial" and who suffered no monetary loss as result of amendment to building zone ordinance was not an "aggrieved person" and had no right to maintain action contesting legality of amendment; but where residential property values near area rezoned commercial by amendment to building zone ordinance were substantially and adversely affected, owners of such property were "aggrieved persons" and entitled to maintain action contesting validity of rezoning amendment.

Any landowner or resident within city whose situation is such that decision of board may adversely affect him in use of property owned or occupied by him in some manner within scope of purposes of zoning ordinance would be "aggrieved" within statute giving any person aggrieved right of appeal from board's decision. Conn.—O'Connor v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Town of Stratford, 98 A.2d 515, 140 Conn. 65—Kamerman v. Leroy, 50 A.2d 175, 133 Conn. 232.

Issuance of permit

(1) Where prior to issuance of building permit, board of aldermen issued order purporting to grant variance for construction of building, issuance of permit had relevant effect, on rights of another resident to appeal from granting of variance, only in bringing proceedings to stage where statutory provision for appeal was surely applicable.

Mass.—Colabufalo v. Board of Appeal of City of Newton, 143 N.E. 2d 536.

(2) Interested landowners in same zoning district and in immediate vicinity of property affected are entitled to challenge legality of permit claimed to violate zoning ordinance. N.J.—Conaway v. Atlantic City, 154 A. 6, 107 N.J.Law 404.

(3) In action objecting to granting of permit for building of additional garage as exception to general limit established by city zoning ordinance, allegation that petitioner resided within one hundred feet of premises in question and was a taxpayer of the city was sufficient to confer a right to contest granting of the permit.

Md.—Heath v. Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, 58 A.2d 896, 190 Md. 478.

(4) Taxpayers of city had right, under city zoning ordinance, to protest against, and appeal to city court from, granting of permit by board of municipal and zoning appeals to construct automobile sales and service building on certain lot under ordinance waiving provisions of zoning ordinance, prohibiting erection of structures for sale of gasoline within three hundred feet from motion picture theater, as applied to particular lot although they did not live in neighborhood thereof and no near neighbors objected.

Md.—Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Byrd, 62 A.2d 588, 191 Md. 632.

court has jurisdiction to review a zoning determination only by means of a proceeding brought by a person or persons aggrieved.⁴⁵ Where so provided by the statute, the right to review a zoning decision is limited to the parties of record to the proceedings before the zoning body whose rights, privileges, or duties are affected by the decision.⁴⁶

In order to be "aggrieved" by a determination so as to entitle one to the right of review, a person must have a specific personal and legal interest in the subject matter of the zoning decision, and be specially and adversely affected thereby.⁴⁷ A per-

"Interested persons"

Persons who were residents of town and owners of real estate adjacent to site for which variance had been granted for construction of proposed theater were "interested persons" within meaning of statute authorizing appeals from decisions of town zoning board of appeals.

Md.—Norwood Heights Imp. Ass'n v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 72 A.2d 1, 195 Md. 1.

(3) An improvement association, not in existence at time of decision of board of municipal and zoning appeals was rendered approving application for permit for construction of garden type apartments, was not "person aggrieved" or "taxpayer" entitled to appeal from decision where its capacity to appeal was merely based on ground that it represented taxpayers and property owners near the property in question.

Md.—Windsor Hills Imp. Ass'n v. Mayor & City Council of Baltimore, 73 A.2d 531, 195 Md. 383.

(4) Where improvement association was neither a "person aggrieved" nor "taxpayer," and hence not authorized to appeal from decision of board of municipal and zoning appeals approving a permit for construction of garden type apartments, petition for intervention after expiration of time for appeal by taxpayer and president of association, could not validate association's attempt to appeal.

(2) Where public buildings commissioner issued permit for erection of garage, workshop, and office building on land in private residential district, person whose residence was in same zoning district and about three hundred feet away had right to appeal to board of appeal from decision of building commissioner and to superior court from decision of board.

(2) An owner of property in close proximity to property involved in application for variance is an "aggrieved party" and has standing to institute proceeding to annul order granting variance.

N.Y.—Feldman v. Nassau Shores Estates, Inc., 172 N.Y.S.2d 769.

(3) Adjoining landowner in a residence A zone of town was a person aggrieved by action of planning and zoning board of town in granting variance to physician to permit him to rent a portion of dwelling house to a dentist for maintenance of an office.

Conn.—Heady v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals for Town of Milford, 94 A.2d 789, 139 Conn. 463.

(4) Where variance which would permit operation of diner in business district contrary to prohibition against operation of restaurants within one hundred feet of a residence district was sought, residents living within two hundred feet of the property in controversy were entitled to file complaint in law division against granting of variance, although the property of the residents was located in a different zone. N.J.—Lacey v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment of Hamilton Tp., Mercer County, 67 A.2d 466, 4 N.J.Super. 422.

(5) Members of town board, collectively and in their representative capacities, and owners of properties in neighborhood of a corporation's land were "persons aggrieved" by, and hence proper party petitioners for review of, determination of town zon-

son having only a general interest may not undertake to promote the judicial enforcement or interpretation of zoning regulations;⁴⁸ and a mere resident owner of zoned property whose only interest is to have strict enforcement of zoning regulations for the benefit of the general welfare of the community or general enhancement of property values is not an aggrieved person.⁴⁹ Moreover, a person is not "aggrieved" within the meaning of a statute with respect to the right to appeal from the granting of a variance or rezoning of property merely because the variance or rezoning even if improvidently granted will increase competition in the business of the party appealing.⁵⁰

According to some authority, however, a resident and taxpayer owning property located on a different street and some distance from the premises which are the subject of the zoning decision may be an "aggrieved person" entitled to prosecute review proceedings;⁵¹ and it has been held that resident taxpayers of the town in which a borough was located, who attended the hearing in a zoning case and took part in the proceedings, are entitled to have orders of the borough commission reviewed, even though they were not residents, landowners, or taxpayers in the borough.⁵² Members of a town planning board may be entitled to appeal to the court from the action of the board of appeals in granting ing board of appeals granting corporation a variance from town building zone ordinance and directing town building inspector to issue permit for construction and use of swimming pool on such land located in one-half residential district.

(2) A nonproperty owner is not an "aggrieved party" and has no right to institute a proceeding to annul an order granting a zoning variance. N.Y.—Feldman v. Nassau Shores Estates, Inc., 173 N.Y.S.2d 769.

(3) Owners of property in village and village property owners' association owning no property therein were not aggrieved parties entitled to review and correction of village board of zoning appeals' determination approving in part college's application for permission to erect seating stands adjacent to its athletic field in village, in absence of showing that any property rights of such association or individual property owners were adversely affected by such determination.

N.Y.—Property Owners Ass'n of Garden City Estates v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Incorporated Village of Garden City, 123 N.Y.S.2d 716, 2 Misc.2d 309.

(4) Proprietor in a less restricted zone is not a "person aggrieved" within meaning of the statute with respect to right to appeal from a decision of the board of appeal granting a variance in zoning regulations, by the introduction into a more restricted zone of any use permitted in the zone in which the proprietor's property is located, and the mere circumstance that the properties are near the border line is immaterial. Mass.—Circle Lounge & Grille v. Board of Appeal of Boston, 86 N.E. 2d 920, 324 Mass. 427.

(5) Owners of residential properties, which were located in residential district but which were situated a mile and a half or more by straight line or two miles or more by road from property in residential district for which town zoning board of appeals had directed the issuance of building permit for a guest house in the nature of a motel, were not "aggrieved persons" who could review board's determination.

N.Y.—Blumberg v. Hill, 119 N.Y.S.2d 855.

(6) In proceeding by owner of residential property to review a determination of a municipal board granting a variance from building code requirements where determination was made on application of a builder selling premises to the owners after the builder was served with notice of violation and directed to remove it, the owners were not persons aggrieved by the determination and so could not maintain the proceeding.

N.Y.—Application of Jonas, 158 N.Y. S.2d 579, 3 A.D.2d 668.

(7) Fact that property owned by one complaining of granting of zoning variance was located 184.5 feet from corner of property for which variance was granted did not authorize it to maintain proceeding to review granting of variance when it failed to prove that it would be adversely affected by board's decision, and its property bounded on another street.

Package store

Resident and taxpayer of town, who owned home located on a different street and approximately one-half mile from premises as to which town planning board had granted waiver of zoning ordinance forbidding operation of package store within one thousand feet of any other premises where alcoholic liquors are sold and had approved premises for use as a package store, was a person "aggrieved" by board's decision and was thereby entitled to appeal from decision to court of common pleas.

a permit,⁵³ and a town building inspector may be a person aggrieved by the decision of the zoning board granting an application for variance from the town zoning regulations after his denial of the applicant's request for a permit to make a use of land prohibited by such regulations.⁵⁴

Under a statute providing that a municipal officer or board may appeal to the courts a decision of a zoning board, appeals are limited to such municipal officers as have some duties to perform in relation to the building code or zoning.⁵⁵ A statute of this nature may permit proceedings for review of a zoning board determination to be instituted by the mayor, board of trustees, or building inspector.⁵⁶

§ 322. Nature and Scope of Review

The scope and extent of judicial review of zoning matters may depend on the mode of review adopted and on constitutional and statutory restrictions.

The scope and extent of judicial review of zoning matters may be limited by the mode of review adopted,⁵⁷ and by permissible constitutional and statutory restrictions.⁵⁸

Review in particular proceedings is considered infra §§ 335-349.

Under a statute providing that the court on appeal from the action of a zoning board shall review the "proceedings" of the board, the reasons for the decision stated by the board and the transcript of the evidence before it both constitute the "proceedings."⁵⁹

§ 323. — Review of Building and Zoning Regulations in General

The courts will review municipal zoning and building ordinances and regulations to determine whether they are a proper exercise of the police power, and whether they are reasonable or arbitrary; but the scope of review is subject to limitations arising from the nature of zoning as governmental and legislative, and from the separation of judicial and legislative power.

As a general rule, the courts will review municipal zoning and building ordinances and regulations to determine whether they are a proper exercise of the police power,⁶⁰ whether they are reasonable or arbitrary,⁶¹ whether such ordinances and regulations

Question of law

(1) Question of reasonableness, as well as of constitutionality, of an ordinance, is a question of law for the court.

Minn.—State v. Clarke Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 56 N.W.2d 667, 238 Minn. 192.

(2) Whether an ordinance excluding business and trade from a residential district is reasonable and whether the power conferred on a governmental agent of a city is arbitrarily exercised is for court to determine as a matter of law, and, in determining the law, court will have due regard to all the circumstances of city, object sought to be attained, and necessity existing for the ordinance.

Tex.—Edge v. City of Bellaire, Civ. App., 200 S.W.2d 224, error refused.

(3) Reasonableness of spot zoning, if authorized by statute, is a question of law for the court to decide. Ga.—Birdsey v. Wesleyan College, 87 S.E.2d 378, 211 Ga. 583—Orr v. Hapeville Realty Investments, 85 S.E.2d 20, 211 Ga. 235.

(4) Where property in question was entirely segregated from that of objectors by three public streets and other property of applicant for rezoning, rezoning of the property for commercial purposes was not "spot zoning" and rule that reasonableness or unreasonableness of "spot zoning" is always question for court's determination is not applicable. Ga.—Birdsey v. Wesleyan College, supra.

Application to given situation

(1) Courts will inquire into reasonableness of zoning ordinance in its application to given situation. Colo.—Hedgcock v. People ex rel. Arden Realty & Investment Co., 57 P.2d 891, 98 Colo. 522.

(2) Where property owner is unable reasonably to use land because of zoning restrictions, if fault lies in fact that particular zoning restriction is unreasonable in application to certain locality, relief is by way of direct attack upon terms of ordinance.

N.Y.—Otto v. Steinhilber, 24 N.E.2d 851, 282 N.Y. 71, reargument denied 26 N.E.2d 811, 282 N.Y. 681.

Test of reasonableness

(1) When reasonableness of zoning ordinance is challenged, the question for the court is whether the ordinance has a rational relation to public health, morals, safety, or welfare.

Ill.—City of Springfield v. Kable, 29 N.E.2d 675, 306 Ill.App. 616.

(2) The courts will not classify a zoning ordinance as unreasonable so long as there is an apparent legal reason for the enacted requirements imposed by such limitations.

Ky.—City of Louisville v. Koenig, 162 S.W.2d 19, 290 Ky. 562, 140 A.L.R. 1369.

Temporary ordinance

Court, in passing on reasonableness of temporary city zoning ordinance, would not scrutinize it with same strictness as though it were permanent ordinance.

Ky.—Fowler v. Obier, 7 S.W.2d 219, 224 Ky. 742.

Facts on which reasonableness depends

Courts may determine facts on which reasonableness of zoning ordinance depends.

pal zoning is subject to limitations arising from the nature of zoning as governmental and legislative, and from the separation of judicial and legislative power.⁶⁴ Accordingly, judicial review of the action taken by zoning authorities is restricted and narrow in scope,⁶⁵ and the general rule against judicial encroachment on the legislature's domain is applicable.⁶⁶

Judicial review of zoning regulations is generally limited to validity,⁶⁷ and the courts may not substitute their judgment for that of the zoning body, acting within its powers,⁶⁸ nor may the courts by

Persuasive reasons

In reviewing exercise of discretion given to zoning commission for establishment of a comprehensive zoning plan, it is not function of the court to substitute its judgment for that of the commission even for reasons which appear most persuasive. D.C.—Lewis v. District of Columbia, 190 F.2d 25, 89 U.S. App. D.C. 72.

Reasonable justification

(1) Fact that a court may not agree with the legislative determination does not authorize the judicial branch of the government to substitute its judgment for that of the zoning authority if there is any reasonable justification for the action of the latter.

Cal.—Willett & Crane v. City of Palos Verdes Estates, 216 P.2d 85, 96 C.A.2d 757.

(2) Where there is any substantial basis or reason for action taken by city council in zoning matter, it is not prerogative of court to take issue with members of council and substitute its own judgment.

La.—Archer v. City of Shreveport, App., 85 So.2d 337.

Debatable considerations

(1) Modification of zone boundaries and regulations by zoning commission partakes of nature of legislative proceedings, and court cannot substitute its judgment for that of commission when commission's considerations are fairly debatable.

Conn.—Kutcher v. Town Planning Commission of Town of Manchester, 88 A.2d 538, 138 Conn. 705.

(2) Where suitability of plaintiff's property for residential use presents a debatable question, court cannot substitute its judgment for that of local legislative body adopting zoning resolution.

N.Y.—Ulmer Park Realty Co. v. City of New York, 63 N.Y.S.2d 143, 270 App. Div. 1044, affirmed 77 N.E.2d 797, 297 N.Y. 788.

Scuteri v. Incorporated Village of Bayville, 120 N.Y.S.2d 794.

(3) In zoning matters, courts will not substitute their judgment for that of legislative body, if question decided was fairly debatable.

Use of particular locus

Necessity for using a particular locus as compared with other available sites was a matter to be decided by the legislative body of the municipality with respect to validity of ordinance amending zoning ordinance. Mass.—Lamarre v. Description of residence district

Supreme court has no authority to make such a material change in description of residence district in village zoning ordinance amendment creating such district as would be tantamount to new description of land intended.

Temporary suspension of zoning ordinance

Housing shortage may justify court in temporarily suspending zoning ordinance restricting area to single family dwellings during the emergency, but does not warrant suspension of ordinance for all time to come.

Cal.—Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 175 P.2d 542, 29 C.2d 332.

Zoning of entire area

Whether entire area of county should be zoned is legislative matter, delegated by General Assembly, through enabling act, to county board of supervisors, and supreme court of appeals is not concerned therewith. Va.—Fairfax County v. Parker, 44 S.E.2d 9, 186 Va. 675.

La.—State ex rel. Pleasant v. Hardy, App., 157 So. 130.

Pa.—Kuznowski v. Board of Zoning Appeals, Com.Pl., 53 Lack.Jur. 53.

Calling of meeting

Court had no power to direct board of trustees of a village to call a new meeting for purpose of voting on a petition for a change of zone or to direct that a new hearing be held.

N.Y.—Steers Sand & Gravel Corp. v. Village Bd. of Village of Northport, 129 N.Y.S.2d 403.

Multiple dwellings

In action by property owner against city for an order directing city inspector to issue a permit for erection of multiple dwellings on property zoned for single residences, trial court could not compel mayor of city and city commission members to amend ordinance to permit erection of multiple dwellings thereon.

Mich.—Northwood Properties Co. v. Perkins, 39 N.W.2d 25, 325 Mich. 419.

Any change in wording of municipal ordinance must be made by municipal legislative body, not court.

75. Ky.—Louisville & Jefferson County Planning & Zoning Commission v. Fortner, 243 S.W.2d 492.

Other statements of rule

(1) On appeal from an order of a zoning board, reviewing court has not the function or right to zone or rezone, but merely to decide whether board's action was arbitrary, capricious, discriminatory, or illegal.

Md.—Nelson v. County Council for Montgomery County, 136 A.2d 378, 214 Md. 587—Kroen v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Baltimore County, 121 A.2d 181, 209 Md. 420—Hedin v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Baltimore County, 105 A.2d 219, 204 Md. 551—Wakefield v. Kraft, 96 A.2d 27, 202 Md. 136.

(2) When court declares a zoning ordinance arbitrary and unreasonable and therefore void, it has no authority to rezone the lands.

Fla.—Quattrocchi v. MacVicar, 82 So. 2d 873.

Exception to zoning ordinance

(1) Court may not grant exceptions to provisions of zoning ordinance which violates spirit of ordinance, nor can it, under pretext of granting exception, assume position of superior legislative body.

Okl.—Beveridge v. Harper & Turner Oil Trust, 35 P.2d 485, 168 Okl. 809.

(2) Action of local legislative body in establishing reasonable exceptions to zoning ordinance is not judicially reviewable.

- Height Limitations
- If question of whether height limitations on buildings imposed by amendment to zoning ordinance enacted pursuant to enabling act would result in a real and genuine enhancement of public interests was fairly debatable, court could not substitute its judgment for that of the municipality, but court would not enforce a plainly invalid exercise of the power of municipality to limit height of buildings conferred by act.

- Decision in other jurisdiction
- The rule that the construction of a statute by the courts of one state before its enactment by the legislature of another state, although not conclusive, is very persuasive, had no application to a situation where the city of Reno, Nev., adopted an ordinance of the city of Indianapolis, Ind., after a decision of the supreme court of Indiana, holding the ordinance constitutional since the application of the doctrine would substitute the supreme court of Indiana as a tribunal to determine whether the ordinance of the city of Reno transgressed the constitution of Nevada, in place of the supreme court of Nevada.

- Other statements of rule
- (1) Challenge to the constitutional validity of zoning ordinance will not be sustained unless court is certain that ordinance is plainly and palpably inadequate and incomplete as to be convinced beyond reasonable doubt that it offends the constitution.
- Ala.—Walls v. City of Guntersville, 45 So.2d 468, 253 Ala. 480.

- Ga.—Hamilton v. North Ga. Elec. Membership Corp., 40 S.E.2d 750, 201 Ga. 689.
- Observance of statutory restrictions
- (1) Court properly under record, concluded that zoning commission which extended established industrial zone into area previously zoned as residential did not violate restrictions imposed by statute requiring

there is room for a fair difference of opinion concerning the reasonableness of a particular ordinance, the court will not overthrow the considered findings of the zoning body.⁷⁸ In this respect, a zoning ordinance may be said to be "fairly debatable" when for any reason it is open to dispute or controversy on grounds that make sense or point to a logical deduction that in no way involves its constitutional validity.⁷⁹

The courts will not hold a municipal building or zoning ordinance or regulation invalid unless it is clearly arbitrary,⁸⁰ plainly unreasonable,⁸¹ or un-zoning regulations to be made with reasonable consideration as to character of district and its peculiar suitability for particular uses, and with view to encouraging most appropriate use of land throughout such municipality, and to be in pursuance of comprehensive plan which would operate to promote general public welfare rather than individual personal advantage.

(2) Where the question is whether amendment to sixth-class city zoning ordinance bears any substantial relation to the objects set forth in the statute, the court will not hold the amendment invalid unless the evidence shows that there is no such relation.

to be overruled only when they have not acted fairly, with proper motives, and on valid reasons.⁸⁴ However, the courts may set aside the work of zoning authorities pro tanto where its application to a particular property is found to be unreasonable and confiscatory.⁸⁵

The court will generally restrict its review of the validity of a zoning ordinance to its validity with respect to the particular property involved in the action,⁸⁶ and an ordinance will not be held invalid as permitting discrimination until a case of discrimination is brought before the courts.⁸⁷ It has been held that, in passing on the validity of a zoning ordinance containing many provisions, the court will limit itself to the particular provisions involved and will not pass on the general validity of the statute;⁸⁸ but, where a general attack is made on the validity of a zoning ordinance, the court will not examine the ordinance piecemeal to determine the validity of minor provisions.⁸⁹ Questions not raised by the appeal will not be determined.⁹⁰

All the facts and circumstances are to be considered in passing on the validity of municipal building and zoning ordinances.⁹¹ Accordingly, in deter-

Police power

In order for the court to set aside action of zoning authorities, it must find that the zoning is beyond the police power and deprives a zoning applicant of property without due process of law.

Preferential treatment

Where plaintiff's property is properly zoned and the discrimination is confined to a relatively small area owned by another, the remedy is not to set aside the entire ordinance but rather to set aside the preferential treatment of the favored parcel.

Matters properly considered

(1) In determining whether board of zoning appeals of county property reclassified two tracts of land from "A" residence zone to "F" light industrial zone, it was proper for court to consider fact that the tracts were near a railroad and property devoted to commercial and industrial uses. Md.—Offutt v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Baltimore County, 105 A. 2d 219, 204 Md. 551.

(2) In determining reasonableness of zoning ordinance, court could consider, among other things, the fact that a very substantial portion of dwellings already erected within the zone do not comply with the ordinance provision, and that the use of a large number of vacant lots within the zone is materially restricted by such ordinance.

mining the law the court will have due regard to all the circumstances of the city, the objects sought to be attained, and the necessity existing for the ordinance.⁹³ Each case involving the validity or constitutionality of zoning laws must be determined on its own facts as they appear in the record before the court.⁹³ In this respect, the constitutionality of a zoning ordinance or of its application to particular property must be determined on the facts and conditions as they existed prior to the time plaintiff proceeded in disregard of the ordinance, and the court must wholly ignore all conditions which resulted from the landowner's action.⁹⁴ The courts will not speculate on whether future conditions, if they come into being, might render a zoning ordinance unconstitutional as applied to such changed conditions, but the ordinance must be unconstitutional as applied to the existing facts in order to be held presently invalid.⁹⁵ In determining whether a zoning ordinance is unreasonable and confiscatory, the degree to which property values are diminished must be considered.⁹⁶

§ 324. — — Questions of Wisdom, Expediency, and Policy

Generally, the courts in passing on the validity of building and zoning ordinances or regulations will not consider questions as to wisdom, expediency, and policy.

As a general rule, questions of wisdom, expediency, and policy will not be considered by the courts in passing on the validity of building and zoning ordinances or regulations.⁹⁷ Similarly, the motives

Considerations held not controlling

(1) Neither the study and investigation of zoning commissioners nor the presumptive validity of ordinance is controlling test whether zoning ordinance is reasonable exercise of police power, but such matter must be decided by courts from particular circumstances.

(3) Where real estate developer and builder could readily change its plans so as to comply with amended zoning ordinance changing required lot frontage from sixty feet to seventy-five feet without hardship other than loss of some of its anticipated profits from use of smaller lots, such loss was not a controlling factor on question whether refusal of mayor and council to approve recommendation of planning board with respect to developer's revised plan, which did not comply with ordinance, entitled developer to any relief.

Benefit from wrongdoing

Public gain weighed against individual hardships

In determining validity of zoning ordinance, although extent of change of property values may be considered, profits accruing to individuals if restrictions were removed must be weighed against resulting detriment to public welfare, and no basis for exercise of police power exists if public gain is small compared with individual hardships, but restrictions protecting public health, safety, and welfare must be sustained, even though impairing private interests to some extent.

which prompted the municipal legislative body to enact the ordinances or regulations are not open to consideration by the courts in passing on their validity.⁹⁸ In other words, it is for the legislature, and not the courts, to determine the justice, wisdom, policy, necessity, or expediency of a zoning law, which has been stated to be a question of political policy.⁹⁹ It has been held, however, that, in determining whether an amendatory zoning ordinance is valid, the court should give due regard to all the circumstances of the city, the object sought to be attained, and the necessity existing for the ordinance.¹ Due regard must be accorded to the collective judgment of those familiar with the locality and the circumstances prevailing in the town, in passing on the validity of a zoning ordinance.²

Substitution of judgment

Fact that wisdom of a zoning ordinance provision is debatable does not empower a court to substitute its judgment for that of legislative body. Mass.—Burnham v. Board of Appeals of Gloucester, 128 N.E.2d 772, 333 Mass. 114.

Planning theories

Court will not necessarily interfere with a zoning amendment which fails to follow the better reasoned planning theories and lays boundary line of district along center of street. N.J.—Bogert v. Washington Tp., Bergen County, 131 A.2d 535, 45 N.J. Super. 13.

More change of policy, however unfortunate result may be, will not justify court in declaring void zoning ordinance which is legitimate exercise of police power.

Industrial use of realty

Where village zoning ordinance provided for residential use, apartment house use, retail business, commercial use, and industrial use, and owner of realty classified for residential use brought action against village to have zoning ordinance declared illegal and void in so far as it applied to his property, court, even if it had right to declare ordinance invalid as to such property, committed prejudicial error in determining that realty should be classified for industrial use, since that was a legislative question. action of the municipality is subject to judicial review only as to whether it is reasonable, arbitrary, discriminatory, confiscatory, or an abuse of discretion.⁶ On the other hand, notwithstanding the general scheme of zoning is valid, the courts may properly inquire whether the scheme of classification and districting has been applied fairly and impartially in each instance;⁷ and the court may set aside an unreasonable and arbitrary restriction imposed by zoning authorities.⁸

The courts will not set aside a classification if its validity is fairly debatable,⁹ or if there is any sub-

Other statements of rule

(1) Unless the conclusion of city's legislative body in determining use classification to be given any particular area is clearly arbitrary and unreasonable, the supreme court cannot substitute its opinion for that of such body in zoning the property in question and establishing boundary lines.

(2) When legislative body determines in first instance that facts or conditions justify particular zoning classification, its judgment on that issue cannot be disturbed in absence of clear showing of no reasonable basis therefor, since law delegates to municipal authorities and not to the courts the power and duty of determining sufficiency of issuable facts in exercise of a purely governmental function.

An amendment or bylaw effecting a rezoning or reclassification, enacted by the authorized body, is nevertheless subject to judicial review on the issue of whether the measure is within or in excess of the authority conferred by the enabling act;¹⁷ and this is so even though the amendment or reclassifi-

Questions presented by appeal

(1) Where there was no evidence of change of conditions when board of zoning commissioners rezoned tract of land from "waterfront" to "suburban," question presented on appeal was whether there were sufficient facts before county commissioners to support their finding that original zoning was a mistake.

Md.—Board of County Com'rs of Talbot County v. Troxell, 132 A.2d 845, 214 Md. 135.

(2) In case involving reclassification from residential to "Manufacturing, Restricted," argument as to "spot zoning" and lack of a comprehensive plan was addressed not only to justification for action taken as to subject property in light of facts presented, but to power of commissioners to create classification; and validity of regulation under which zoning officials acted was properly before court.

Md.—Huff v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Baltimore County, 133 A.2d 83, 214 Md. 48.

Support by evidence

Constitutional and statutory requirement that rezoning action of zoning body must be supported by competent and substantial evidence does not mean that reviewing court may substitute its own judgment on the evidence for that of the zoning body; however, the reviewing court must decide whether the zoning authority could have reasonably made its findings and reached its result on consideration of all the evidence before it, and the reviewing court can set aside decisions clearly contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence.

A court should be cautious about disturbing decision of local zoning board where honest judgment has been reasonably and fairly exercised. Conn.—Stern v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of City of Norwich, 99 A.2d 130, 140 Conn. 241.

Reasonable debate

Only where there is no room for reasonable debate as to whether facts justified a board of zoning appeal's action or where record is devoid of supporting facts, may court hold action of board void.

Caution

Circumstances and conditions in matters of zone changes and regulations are peculiarly within knowledge of zoning commission, and where it appears that an honest judgment has been reasonably and fairly exercised after a full hearing court should be cautious about disturbing decision of local authority.

Neb.—Frank v. Russell, 70 N.W.2d 306, 160 Neb. 354.

Room for reasonable debate

Only where there is no room for reasonable debate as to whether facts justified zoning board decision, or where record is devoid of supporting facts, is court justified in declaring decision of board arbitrary or discriminatory.

Md.—Offutt v. Board of Zoning Appeals of Baltimore County, 105 A. 2d 219, 204 Md. 551.

Statutory right of appeal

In light of statute granting a right of appeal from decisions of local zoning authorities, court cannot take view in every case that discretion exercised by local zoning authority must not be disturbed, for if it did right of appeal would be empty, and court can grant relief on appeal in those cases where local authority has acted arbitrarily or illegally and consequently has abused discretion entrusted to it.

Conn.—Suffield Heights Corp. v. Town Planning Commission of Town of Manchester, 133 A.2d 612, 144 Conn. 425.

Compliance with legal requirements

Function of board of zoning appeals is to exercise discretion of experts, and court, although it may not arrive at same conclusion, will not disturb a decision on review where board has complied with all legal requirements of notice and hearing, and record shows substantial evidence to sustain finding.

own merits.³⁷ However, the general rule that an appellate court will consider only such questions as were raised and reserved in the lower court applies on review by courts of determinations and orders of zoning agencies or bodies, and ordinarily precludes from consideration on review objections or questions which were not properly raised in the administrative proceedings.³⁸ Where justice demands it, an appeal from the action of a zoning board of adjustment in refusing a variance or special exception will be treated by the court as an appeal from a refusal to change zoning.³⁹

§ 328. — Grant or Refusal of Permits

On review of a decision with respect to a permit or certificate provided for under the building and zoning laws, the court may determine all questions affecting the legality of the administrative action; but the decision of the board or officer will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of illegality or abuse of discretion.

Generally, on review of a decision with respect to a permit or certificate provided for under the building and zoning laws for the construction, alteration, or use of a building, the court may determine all questions affecting the legality of the administrative action, including that of validity of the ordinance or regulation governing issuance of the permit or certificate.⁴⁰ The controlling question on such an appeal is whether the body or official whose decision is appealed from acted arbitrarily or illegally or so unreasonably as to have abused its or his discretion,⁴¹ the rule being that the decision will not

Stipulations

(1) In action for a judicial ascertainment that board of adjustment had no jurisdiction on appeal from order of board of county commissioners denying application for variance from zoning regulation, use of quoted word in stipulation reciting that board of adjustment granted a "variance," did not amount to a stipulation of fact but was only a conclusion of law and was not therefore binding on courts in determining whether action of board of adjustment in allowing modification of existing zoning laws was a variance or an act amounting to a rezoning. Fla.—Troup v. Bird, 53 So.2d 717.

(2) Use of quoted words in stipulation reciting that delay in granting permit for excavation and building was working a "great hardship" on defendants, did not amount to a stipulation of facts that literal enforcement of zoning ordinance would result in unnecessary hardship within meaning of statute granting special exception to existing zoning laws and regulations in a specific instance where literal enforcement would force unnecessary hardship on property owner, but was only to effect that delay was working hardship. What law governs

(1) Decision of court, determining question whether building project for which permit was sought is prohibited by zoning ordinance, is controlled by ordinance in effect at time of decision, not by previous ordinance operative when permit was sought.

N.J.—Tice v. Borough of Woodcliff v. Lake Bergen County, 78 A.2d 825, 12 N.J.Super. 20.

(2) In determining whether applicant for building permit is entitled thereto, status of law at time of decision of court, not at time of application for permit or of application for, or allowance of, rule to show cause, is controlling, and change of law pending administrative hearing or act must be followed by court.

N.J.—Concord Garden Apartments v. Board of Adjustment of City of Englewood, 64 A.2d 355, 1 N.J.Super. 301.

Issues held moot

Where, pending appeal from judgment dismissing complaint which sought review of proceedings before board of adjustment, which had issued permit authorizing construction and operation of market building and parking lot in a residential district, ordinance was amended so as to permit operation of parking lot in any district without consent of eighty per cent of property owners, and a similar permit was granted under amended ordinance to same applicants, and time for review of such action had expired, issues presented by appeal were moot.

Colo.—Cliff v. Billett, 241 P.2d 437, 125 Colo. 138.

Prior construction of ordinance

Where board of adjustment issued zoning permit for construction of motor court hotel in part of city which was similarly zoned as property on which plaintiff sought to build motor court but board had refused plaintiff permit on property, board had, therefore, construed ordinance as giving it power to grant permits for erection and operation of such places of business and this construction should not be overruled without cogent reason.

Errors in law

Decision of board of adjustment on application for permit to erect nonconforming building is final, subject to right of courts to review errors in law and to give relief against order if it is arbitrary, oppressive, or attended with manifest abuse of discretion.

Attack on validity of ordinance

(1) Building owners seeking review of order of board of adjustment revoking building permits were not entitled to raise for first time on appeal question as to constitutionality of such limitation, since no question of either jurisdiction or public policy was involved.

(2) A taxpayer and owners of land in area zoned by city ordinance as residential district may raise question of validity of later ordinance, rezoning single lot in such district as first commercial district, on appeal to city court from ruling of city board of zoning appeals authorizing establishment of filling station on such lot, even though such question was not before board.

Unfair action

Zoning board of appeals is possessed of wide discretion, and its decision on application for certificate of approval may be overruled only if defendant board has not acted fairly, or with proper motives, or on valid reasons.

Nonconforming use

In proceeding by village officers to review determination of board of appeals overruling officers' denial of permit for improvement of premises occupied as nonconforming use, function of supreme court was to decide whether determination of board was arbitrary, capricious, or contrary to law, and not to retry matter de novo.

N.Y.—Fox v. Adams, 134 N.Y.S.2d 534.

Apartment houses

Fact that decision of board of municipal and zoning appeals approving a permit for construction of apartment houses was not in conformity with good zoning and proposed construction was not in conformity with surrounding architectural design of neighborhood was no ground for appeal, since courts can review only question of whether board's decision is illegal.

judgment of a board in the granting of a permit.⁴⁴ It has been held, however, that where the action of a zoning board in revoking a permit did not involve the exercise of powers essentially administrative, the court is not limited in the review of such action to a determination of whether the board's action was arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable.⁴⁵

In reviewing administrative action with respect to a permit, all matters contained in the record may be considered by the court;⁴⁶ but extraneous issues not presented to the board or properly brought up for review cannot be determined on such appeal.⁴⁷

Where it appears that an honest judgment has been reasonably and fairly exercised after full hearing, courts should be cautious about disturbing decision of local authority in granting zoning variance.

Conn.—Devaney v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 122 A.2d 303, 143 Conn. 322.

More advantage or financial benefit to an applicant for a variance of a zoning ordinance does not warrant judicial interference with administrative board's exercise of its discretion in applying zoning ordinance according to its terms.

Impairment of residential areas

Error held immaterial

Error in computing depth of rear yard required under zoning ordinance at twenty six feet instead of twenty two and five tenths feet did not warrant reversal of decision of city zoning board of appeals refusing to grant a variance in rear yard re-

§ 329. — Grant or Refusal of Exceptions or Variances

Generally, the courts will not interfere with the decisions of zoning authorities on applications for exceptions or variances unless they are plainly illegal, arbitrary, unreasonable, or an abuse of discretion.

On judicial review of the decisions of zoning authorities on applications for exceptions or variances, the courts will not interfere with their action except on adequate grounds,⁴⁸ that is to say, the court will not interfere with the decision unless it is plainly illegal,⁴⁹ arbitrary, unreasonable, or an quirement, where proposed building would leave a rear yard of only fifteen feet and record indicated that correct computation of required depth would not have affected board's decision.

Sole power

A board of zoning appeals has the sole power within its discretion to vary a zoning ordinance and its decision is reviewable by courts only for illegality in its proceedings.

Ind.—Board of Zoning Appeals of City of Mishawaka v. School City of Mishawaka, 145 N.E.2d 302.

Correction of legal errors

The courts must not trespass on the administrative work of the board of standards and appeals under a zoning ordinance, but must confine their review of board's action to correcting legal errors.

Nonjurisdictional defects

Under statute providing that decision of board of zoning appeals is reviewable only for illegality, courts generally are inclined to treat defects that are not plainly jurisdictional as irregularities rather than as illegalities.

Meaning of term

(1) "Abuse of discretion" means action that is arbitrary or unreasonable, such as in opposition to the intent and policy of the zoning statute and ordinance as applied to the circumstances.

N.J.—Potts v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Princeton, 43 A.2d 850, 133 N.J.Law 230.

(2) Phrase "arbitrary or capricious" has no opprobrious connotation, but in technical legal significance means an administrative action not supported by evidence or lacking a rational basis.

D.C.—O'Boyle v. Coe, D.C., 155 F. Supp. 581.

Unreasonable conditions

Courts have power to set aside such restrictions or conditions imposed by board as are unreasonable or arbitrary.

Ky.—Selligman v. Western & Southern Life Ins. Co., 126 S.W.2d 419, 277 Ky. 551.

Poor exercise of discretion

Where there is power in a zoning ordinance to grant a variance and there is an absence of corruption, caprice and unreason, the court, although conscious that the exercise of discretion was not up to the usual good standard, must bow to the determination of the administrative branch of the government.

N.Y.—Hannigan v. Murdock, 47 N.Y. S.2d 855.

Only reasonable conclusion

On appeal from order of city board of zoning appeals granting permission to extend store building in business zone into adjacent residential zone, trial court could direct judgment for appellants only if sole reasonable conclusion from facts found by court and assumed to be before board would be that extension should not have been granted.

Tex.—Driskell v. Board of Adjustment, Civ.App., 195 S.W.2d 594, refused no reversible error.

Other statement of rule

On judicial review of local zoning board's making or refusal of recommendation of variance from local zoning ordinance to local governing body question is never what court would have done in circumstances, but whether zoning board abused its authority or departed from law.

N.J.—Cummins v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Leonia, Bergen County, 121 A.2d 405, 39 N.J. Super. 452.

Inquiry dependent on nature of decision

(1) Where the variance is denied, the only question for the court is whether the petitioner has been illegally oppressed.

N.Y.—Reed v. Board of Standards and Appeals of City of New York, 174 N.E. 301, 255 N.Y. 126.

In re Cosden, 64 N.Y.S.2d 37, affirmed 63 N.Y.S.2d 640, 270 App.Div. 1018.

(2) Where the variance is granted, the only question is the power of the board to grant the application.

N.Y.—Reed v. Board of Standards and Appeals of City of New York, 174 N.E. 301, 255 N.Y. 126.

Hickox v. Griffin, 79 N.Y.S.2d 193, 274 App.Div. 793, reversed on other grounds 83 N.E.2d 836, 298 N.Y. 365.

(3) Where court decided that granting of zoning variance on imposition of conditions was an ultra vires act on part of municipality, and consequently resolution permitting erection of a commercial laboratory thereon was illegal and void, it was unnecessary for court to inspect property, to discuss physical surroundings of property or fact that area north of premises was zoned for commercial use, or that a commercial use was being carried on just west of property in question.

N.J.—V. F. Zahodiakin Engineering Corp. v. Zoning Ordinance Bd. of Adjustment of City of Summit, 82 A.2d 493, 14 N.J. Super. 537, affirmed 86 A.2d 127, 8 N.J. 386.

Issues held not involved

N.Y.—Smith v. Hartman, 144 N.Y.S. 2d 13, 208 Misc. 880.

termination of the board are shown to be arbitrary and contrary to the weight of the evidence, in which case the court may and should make its own ruling.⁵⁵ Where a zoning board erred in its application of law in denying a variance, the court on appeal properly considered the matter on the merits.⁵⁶

Under some statutes, the scope of inquiry on appeal is the same as before the board of adjustment.⁵⁷

In particular cases, it has been held, on judicial review of the administrative proceedings and decision, that the board or officer did not abuse its or his discretion in granting a variance,⁵⁸ or in refus-in way of carrying out strict letter of ordinance, failure of board of zoning appeals in varying ordinance expressly to find practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships would not affect judgment of trial court finding practical difficulty and unnecessary hardship if facts supported such a conclusion.

Conn.—Stavola v. Bulkeley, 56 A.2d 645, 134 Conn. 186.

Supplemental findings

Where parties challenging board of adjustment's determination that variance should be granted had at no time objected to board's filing supplemental findings months after granting of variance, and after institution of action challenging grant; and where supplemental findings did not impair any rights of objectors but would enable court to deal with main issues directly and at once, supplemental findings would be given same effect as though they had been part of board's original action. 55. Pa.—Perelman v. Board of Adjustment of Borough of Yeadon, 18 A.2d 438, 144 Pa.Super. 5.

Other statement of rule

If it should be made to appear that evidence on which board of zoning appeals acted was devoid of probative value, that quantum of legitimate evidence was so proportionately meager as to lead to conviction that finding does not rest on a rational basis, or that result of hearing must have been substantially influenced by improper considerations, order will be set aside.

Sale of liquor

Where property on which applicants had conducted a restaurant with a liquor permit had been condemned by city without applicants' fault, action of city zoning board of appeals in granting application for a waiver of zoning regulations respecting use of buildings for sale of liquor so as to permit applicants to resume business at another place was not arbitrary or unreasonable.

Action as to other property

Mere fact that variances affecting other property in area had been granted by board of standards and appeals would not entitle property owner whose petition for variance had been denied to order annulling board's determination on ground that it was arbitrary and discriminatory. a variance.⁶¹

Matters not properly presented for review. On review of a decision with respect to an application for a variance or exception, the reviewing court will not consider or determine extraneous questions or issues not presented to the board or properly brought up for review.⁶² Where a landowner had merely sought a temporary permit for a certain use of his property rather than a variance, and the administrative body never rendered a decision on the issue of variance, that issue is not before the court notwithstanding the stipulation of the parties that the court might consider an application for a variance to have been made and denied by the administrative body.⁶³

§ 330. ——— Decisions as to Motor Vehicle Service Stations and Garages

On judicial review of zoning decisions as to motor vehicle service stations and garages, the court will confine its consideration to the legality of the decision, and it will not disturb the action taken unless it is under the circumstances unreasonable, arbitrary, or an abuse of discretion.

On review of a decision with respect to an application for a service station or garage permit or variance, the court may inquire into the legality of the decision;⁶⁴ but the decision appealed from will not be disturbed unless it is under the circumstances unreasonable, arbitrary, or an abuse of discretion.⁶⁵

(2) Where one of two grounds relied on was sufficient to sustain refusal of local board to grant certificate of approval of proposed site of gasoline station, alleged insufficiency of second ground could not invalidate decision.

The appeal ordinarily does not involve a transfer of original jurisdiction to the court so as to enable it to pass on the application,⁶⁶ and the court may not substitute its judgment or discretion for that of the board,⁶⁷ although it may direct the board to issue the permit or certificate where the only reasonable conclusion from the record and all the facts of the case is that applicant is entitled to it.⁶⁸ However, it has been stated broadly that courts are disinclined to permit a board of appeals to grant a variance so as to permit the erection of a service station in a prohibited district.⁶⁹

The court will not consider procedural objections which should have, but were not, raised before the board of appeals.⁷⁰ Whether or not a proposed garage comes within a provision permitting certain garages to be constructed or used as accessory buildings is a question for the court to determine in view of the facts proved in the case.⁷¹ On appeal from denial of a permit for insufficiency of affirmative votes of members of the board, the question before the court is not whether there was substantial evidence to support a minority finding against granting the permit, but whether there was a reasonable basis in fact to support refusal of the permit as an exercise of police power.⁷² Having invoked a zoning provision as the basis for his application for the permit, applicant cannot on appeal from denial of his application urge the inapplicability of such provision to the proposed filling station or garage.⁷³ On review of an order revoking a permit, the permittee cannot urge his right to a variance, particularly where the revocation was expressly stated to be without prejudice to the right to apply for a variance.⁷⁴

§ 331. — Fact Questions; Trial de Novo

- a. In general
- b. Trial de novo and consideration of additional evidence

a. In General

Unless otherwise provided by constitutional or statutory provision, review of a determination and proceeding of zoning authorities is confined to matters of law, and the determination of facts by the zoning body ordinarily is conclusive where supported by sufficient evidence.

As a general rule, unless otherwise provided by constitutional or statutory provision, review of a determination and proceeding of zoning authorities is confined to matters of law, and the determination of facts by the zoning body ordinarily is conclusive.⁷⁵ Consequently, it has been held that the re-

Divided vote

Where concurring vote of four out of five members of board of zoning appeals was necessary to grant permit to construct gasoline filling station and board was precluded, by a two to three vote, from acting as a fact-finding body, question before court on review was not whether there was substantial evidence before board to support a minority finding against granting of permit but whether there was a reasonable basis in fact to support refusal as an exercise of police power.

Discretion

Circuit court cannot substitute its own discretion in weighing evidence for discretion of board of adjustment in relation to zoning ordinances, and order of board cannot be set aside solely because court considers evidence in different light, unless action of board is clearly contrary to overwhelming weight of evidence. Minimum standard for review

Provisions of statute and zoning ordinance limiting judicial review by examine the record for this purpose.⁸⁵ On the other hand, a finding not supported by evidence will be considered arbitrary and will not be sustained,⁸⁶ and the court may set aside decisions not supported by substantial evidence,⁸⁷ or clearly contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence.⁸⁸ The court cannot adopt findings not supported by evidence heard and appearing only in the written decision of the board.⁸⁹ The court does not review the personal opinions or knowledge of members of the zoning body, and the question whether the action of the zoning body is arbitrary must be determined from the facts from which the zoning body drew its conclusion, and not from the conclusion itself.⁹⁰

Some statutes providing for an appeal from a zoning board contemplate a review of facts as well as law, and the parties are not restricted to an appeal only on the ground that the zoning order is illegal.⁹¹

b. Trial de Novo and Consideration of Additional Evidence

Generally, the review of the action or proceedings of a zoning body is confined to the record made at the hearing before such body, and the court will not try the case de novo; but under some statutes, the taking and consideration of additional evidence, or a trial de novo, may be proper or necessary and the court may make such decision as under the evidence and applicable principles of law is just and proper.

Generally, the review of the action or proceedings of a zoning body is confined to the record made at the hearing before such body, and the legality of the action taken below must be determined solely by what was adduced at the hearing and not by matters outside the record.⁹² Ordinarily the case will not be tried de novo,⁹³ and it has been held that the circuit court of orders of city board of adjustment to correction of illegalities must be read in light of minimum standard for review provided by constitution requiring that review of all final decisions of any administrative body in which a hearing is required include determination whether such decisions are supported by competent and substantial evidence on whole record.

Grant of variance

In proceeding for review of a determination of town zoning board of appeals granting a variance, in deciding whether petitioners met burden of showing action of board was arbitrary, court would consider answers of board and landowner, copy of map submitted to board showing buildings on owner's property and proposed additions thereto, as a necessary part of record.

No rational basis for finding

If it should be made to appear that the evidence on which board of zoning appeals acted was devoid of probative value, that quantum of legitimate evidence was so proportionately meager as to lead to the conviction that finding does not rest on a rational basis, or that result of hearing must have been substantially influenced by improper considerations, order will be set aside.

Limited function of court

On appeal from decision of board of zoning appeals, court of common pleas was not required or permitted, by trial de novo, to substitute its finding and conclusion for decision of board, and functions of court were limited to determination of whether board had acted arbitrarily, illegally, or unreasonably so as to have abused its discretion.

Conn.—Talmadge v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 109 A.2d 253, 141 Conn. 639.

Application for exception

Where question whether an application for an exception to zoning ordinance should be granted was committed to sound discretion of court is limited in its review of the case to the evidence heard by the board, as certified by the board to it.⁹⁴ So, an action to set aside a zoning order does not involve a trial de novo or an appeal on the merits, and the only matter which may be considered is whether the zoning order is unconstitutional.⁹⁵ Where review of the board's decision is sought on the ground that the ordinance under which it acted was invalid for alleged failure to publish a use map, and evidence in the record is unsatisfactory with respect to supporting this contention, the court is not authorized to hear evidence concerning publication of the ordinance for the purpose of supplying the deficiencies in the record, but the deficiencies should be corrected by remanding the matter to the board for further hearing.⁹⁶

Under some statutes, however, on direct review of the action of zoning authorities, the court hears the matter de novo, expressly determines the facts, and rules on the legal validity of the administrative decision in the light of facts found by the court.⁹⁷ So, under a statute providing for hearings de novo by the court on review of a zoning regulation, the test in the court is not whether the administrative decision finds reasonable support in substantial evidence, but whether or not the court acting as a fact finding body, from consideration of all the evidence heard, is of the opinion that the evidence preponderates against the decision of the commission.⁹⁸ Under other statutes, the court may not try the case de novo in the sense that the court may substitute its discretion for that of the zoning board, but the case may be tried de novo for the purpose of determining whether the order of the board is illegal and whether there has been a manifest abuse of discretion.⁹⁹

While it is sometimes provided that the appeal be tried de novo on the record,¹ under other statutes, the taking and consideration of additional evidence may be proper or necessary,² and the court may board of zoning adjustment, federal court could not substitute its own judgment for that of board and in an action to set aside an order of board denying an exception could not adjudicate matter de novo.

Action held one for trial de novo

An action brought in district court by timely filing of aggrieved person's petition stating that decision of metropolitan city's zoning board of appeals, permitting erection of store building over entire length of certain lots in zoned second commercial district, is illegal on specified grounds, and seeking decree declaring board's action null and void, is one for trial de novo within limitations of pleadings and evidence taken before court, and constitutes attack on board's action as not within scope of its authority under city's home rule charter or as illegal.

Similar findings

Where trial court, on appeal from decision of zoning board of appeals granting variance in making findings, which were in substance same as made by board of appeals, made it clear that only facts on which it based decree were those stated in board's decision, although decision had not been admitted for any wider purpose than showing conclusion reached by board, court failed to grant independent determination of fact required under rules, and its decree could not be validated on any theory that findings were voluntary and not a report under statute.

Mass.—Marotta v. Board of Appeals of Revere, 143 N.E.2d 270.

Right not denied

Where trial court heard witnesses and made findings and rulings on evidence, and ruled that he did not act under misapprehension that plaintiff was not entitled to a trial de novo, on plaintiff's appeal from zoning board of adjustment decision denying petition for variance from zoning ordinance, plaintiff was not denied a trial de novo.

have power to hear evidence and make such decision as under the evidence and applicable principles of law is just and proper.³ Under some statutes, the court renders a determination on a combined record of the zoning board and the court, which is the result of neither a trial de novo nor of a mere review and inspection of the board's acts, and the court tests the discretion of the board and the Necessity of making findings of fact see infra § 366.

Reference

In proceeding to review determination of town zoning board of appeals, granting corporation a variance from town building zone ordinance to permit construction and use of swimming pool on corporation land in one-family residential district, record presented fact issues which could not be decided summarily on mere statements, affidavits not subject to impeachment, and exhibits, but necessitated testimony for proper disposition of matter, so as to require reference of case by supreme court to official referee to hear and report his fact findings and conclusions of law consistent with opinion of court.

Necessity of hearing

Determination as to whether town board's action in denying permission to use property zoned in an industrial district as an open-air, drive-in theater was unconstitutional, capricious, or arbitrary should not be made until after a hearing at which all pertinent facts may be adduced and order dismissing petition to review such denial was reversed.

Discretion held not abused

(1) In general.

Conn.—Devaney v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 132 A.2d 303, 143 Conn. 322.

(2) In proceeding by owner of land across street to have land involved declared in second residential district without nonconforming use under zoning ordinance, where all parties interested, and their attorneys, appeared before board of adjustment and were given an opportunity to be fully heard, trial judge's refusal on review to permit landowner to introduce testimony was not an abuse of discretion.

Tex.—Rowton v. Alagood, Civ.App., 250 S.W.2d 264.

Variance

Although record of proceedings by zoning board of adjustment was barren of any evidence to prove unnecessary hardship and to justify grant of a variance, court of common pleas, on appeal from board order revoking variance, could affirm order of revocation without taking testimony.

Pa.—Silverco, Inc. v. Zoning Bd. of Adjustment and Dept. of Licenses

According to some authority only when the record fails to present the zoning hearing in sufficient scope to determine the merits of the appeal, or when some extraordinary reason requires it, should the court hear evidence.⁶ Before the court takes evidence, it should first be informed as to the evidence already taken by the board and findings that the board made on the basis of such evidence.⁷ The court may refuse to hear evidence supplemental to that offered to the zoning board on the original application where the matter is essentially one for administrative determination and the facts in support of petitioner's claim should have been presented to the board.⁸

On a review de novo, while the board's decision has no evidentiary weight with respect to facts relevant to test it,⁹ the decision is necessarily examined to determine what it is that the board purported to do;¹⁰ and an adjudication of the court on appeal that the decision of the board of zoning adjustment to rezone is valid cannot be based on the newly found facts of the court materially at variance with those found by the board, since the discretionary power to zone or rezone is entrusted to the board and not the court.¹¹ It has been held that the decision of the court must be based on the same considerations as the decision of the board.¹² According to some authority, where the court takes additional testimony on appeal from a decision of the board, it is the duty of the court to determine the case on its merits rather than on the issue of whether the board committed a manifest abuse of discretion;¹³ and the finding of the court, if it hears testimony, should be confined to facts established by evidence offered to it.¹⁴ Where it does not appear on an appeal what conclusions were reached by the board which rendered the decision, the court must determine the facts and assume that the board had such facts before it,¹⁵ and such findings of fact by the court are conclusive.¹⁶

§ 332. Record

Every part of the record before the zoning body which is necessary to a review of its decision must be made a part of the record brought before the court, and matters which are to be presented for consideration by the court must be made to appear in the record.

As a general rule, every part of the record before the zoning body which is necessary to a review of its decision must be made a part of the record brought before the court, and matters which are to be presented for consideration by the court must be made to appear in the record.¹⁷ The rec-

Time for sending up record

On appeal from city board of adjustment's denial of a building permit, where petitioner did not ask the county court to stay proceedings appealed from, where board was not a party to the appeal, and where no notice was required to be given to the board, an order, commanding the board to send up record within twenty-one days, allowed sufficient time and board could not complain of procedure followed.

Findings not part of decision

In proceeding by village officers to review determination of board of appeals overruling officers' denial of permit for improvement of premises occupied as nonconforming use, board's findings of fact, which were

record does not contain the findings of such body.²¹ Where the record on appeal from the decision of a zoning board is incomplete, whether the judge should grant a timely motion requiring the board to send up a certified copy of its judgment and such proceedings as were had before the board is a matter largely within the discretion of the judge.²²

On a review by certiorari, the standard by which the sufficiency of the record returned in response to the writ is measured has been held to be that established by statute, and not that which is applied in a common-law certiorari proceeding.²³ It may be required that the basis on which the board acted clearly appear in the record²⁴ so as to render an intelligent review possible.²⁵ Ordinarily, the presumption of regularity in proceedings before a board does not waive the necessity of including indispensable features in the record;²⁶ and in the absence of an adequate record the decision will not be sustained.²⁷ It has been held, however, that a decision of the board may be sustained, although it contains no statement of reasons or grounds therefor, where the undisputed evidence in the record supports the conclusion reached.²⁸ On review by certiorari, the record may be such as to require treatment of an application to the board as one for a variance only rather than one for a variance or an exception.²⁹

B. MODE OF REVIEW; NATURE AND SCOPE OF PARTICULAR REMEDIES

§ 333. In General

An appropriate mode of review must be employed to obtain judicial relief from the action or decision of building and zoning authorities; and a special statutory method of appeal and review by the courts of a zoning decision must be followed to the exclusion of other remedies.

Generally, a party seeking review of the action or decision of building and zoning authorities must follow an appropriate mode of review.³⁰ Proceed-clearly basis for its decision and which were incorporated in its answer and returned to reviewing court, were accepted by reviewing court as fully effective findings in support of decision, although they were not made part of, or handed down with, the decision.

General or special zoning laws

Legislative history of statute relating to appeals in zoning cases indicates that the statute was intended to create a right of appeal from every zoning commission in the state, regardless of whether the municipality is acting under general or special zoning laws, and afforded a right of appeal in a zoning case in the town of West Hartford even though special act under which West Hartford received its zoning powers made no provision for appeal; "zoning commissions," within statute is a term of general application, and statute granted right of appeal from town council which was acting as a zoning commission.

Conn.—Sullivan v. Town Council of

ing a permit,³⁴ or an exception or variance.³⁵ Where the appeal is one provided by statute, the court is limited in the scope of its jurisdiction to the provisions of the zoning statutes and ordinances,³⁶ and even though the court might possess general equity jurisdiction, in a zoning appeal it would be unable to apply equitable principles.³⁷

In particular circumstances, review of a zoning decision may be sought in a direct action against the zoning board, on issues made by pleadings as in other cases,³⁸ and where it is claimed that the entire zoning ordinance is void the remedy may be asserted by direct action.³⁹ In some jurisdictions, a question whether a zoning ordinance as applied to a certain piece of property is invalid may be raised by a bill in equity,⁴⁰ and where there is no provision for appeal from the action of a municipal legislative body in enacting or amending a zoning ordinance, the remedy of aggrieved property owners is such as may be available through resort to the extraordinary equitable jurisdiction of the courts.⁴¹ Equitable relief from the action of a zoning board

Town of West Hartford, 121 A.2d 630, 143 Conn. 280.

Proceeding held one by appeal

(1) Plaintiff's application to court of common pleas which stated that plaintiff was appealing from decision of zoning board of appeals, and which contained all allegations essential to appeal from board, and which set out order appealed from and facts relied on to support allegation of unreasonableness of board's action was an appeal, and court of common pleas erred in dismissing it as action in equity, even though the application did not contain a prayer for reversal of board's decision.

Conn.—Fisher v. Board of Zoning Appeals of the Town of Monroe, 113 A.2d 587, 142 Conn. 275.

(2) Even though plaintiff's application on appeal from decision of zoning board of appeals contained prayers for a temporary and permanent injunction and for a declaratory judgment, which relief could not be granted on appeal, the presence of such prayer in application did not convert the appeal into some other form of action.

Conn.—Fisher v. Board of Zoning Appeals of the Town of Monroe, supra.

Statute held inapplicable

(1) Statute providing for appeal generally to superior court from acts of board of county commissioners is inapplicable where board acts under a special law for special purposes.

Wash.—State ex rel. Lyon v. Board of Com'rs of Pierce County, 196 P.2d 997, 31 Wash.2d 366.

(2) Provision in 1947 act making a number of changes in previously existing statutes as to zoning, which authorized an appeal from decision of zoning commission, would not be construed as giving court of common pleas jurisdiction of an appeal from town commission's action in granting a change of zone in a proceeding which had been commenced before effective date of the act.

Nature of proceeding

Where action designated a petition in equity was filed against township zoning board of appeals for order reversing board's decision revoking building alteration permit on ground that decision was unreasonable and unlawful, action was an appeal and not an original cause of action.

Statute held inapplicable

Statute providing for appeal generally to superior court from actions of board of county commissioners did not authorize appeal to superior court from decision of board granting variance permit to operate tavern in highway-use district zoned against such business by county planning commission created by board pursuant to special statute permitting establishment of use districts and general zoning regulations to promote general welfare.

Repeal of charter provision

Statute providing that appeals may be taken from action of any board of zoning appeals within 30 days after final action of such board superseded or repealed by implication city charter provision that court shall review record and other matters produced by board pursuant to issuance of a writ and may reverse or modify the decision reviewed, in whole or in part, when it is satisfied that decision of board is contrary to law or that it is arbitrary and constitutes abuse of discretion.

will not be granted, however, where there is a complete and adequate remedy at law.⁴² Under some statutes, a suit in equity to annul a zoning decision is not a permissible mode of review except as authorized by the statute;⁴³ and where an exclusive statutory remedy is provided for, a bill in equity may not be brought to review the validity of a zoning regulation or its application.⁴⁴

Under a statute providing a remedy in lieu of certiorari and mandamus to review "a determination" of a public officer or body, the action or proceeding is not available to review legislative action of a zoning officer or board, as distinguished from administrative action.⁴⁵ Accordingly, such a proceeding is not maintainable to review the denial of a petition to amend or change provisions of a zoning ordinance so as to allow a particular use of petitioner's property.⁴⁶ However, where a legislative body is authorized by special zoning ordinance provision to grant a special exception or special use permit, its determination on an application therefor is held to involve an exercise of judgment or discretion reviewable in such a statutory proceeding.⁴⁷ It has been held that whether a zoning ordinance is invalid cannot be raised in a proceeding to have the board of zoning appeals vary the ordinance⁴⁸ or in a proceeding by a county park commission to acquire title to land.⁴⁹

Writ of prohibition. In a proper case, a proceeding may properly be maintained for a writ of prohibition against the zoning board;⁵⁰ but where the statutory right of appeal from the action of the board is adequate to raise the matter complained of by the property owner, a writ of prohibition is not justified.⁵¹

Decision as to building code

Where bill brought as an appeal from decision of board of appeal authorizing variance of building code and zoning ordinance, by permitting owners of dwelling house to convert it into nursing home, did not state case in equity for relief with respect to building code, fact that appeal from decision in respect to zoning ordinance was within court's jurisdiction did not give court jurisdiction over board's decision as to building code.

exclusive;⁵² and under some provisions, all questions involved in the application of zoning ordinances, whether relating to confiscation of property or the effect of provisions of the ordinance, must be heard and considered under the remedy provided by the statute.⁵³ So, as a general rule, a special statutory method of appeal and review by the courts of a decision rendered in the administration of building and zoning laws and regulations must be followed to the exclusion of other remedies.⁵⁴

One failing to pursue his statutory remedy is precluded from attacking a zoning ordinance collaterally on the ground that it is unreasonable and unconstitutional.⁵⁵ Furthermore, a zoning ordinance is not subject to collateral attack by the city which classified the property.⁵⁶

§ 334. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

Ordinarily a property owner must pursue and exhaust the administrative remedy available to him under a zoning ordinance or statute before resorting to the courts for other relief from the action or decision of zoning authorities; but the rule is not absolute and without exceptions, and in various circumstances it may be inapplicable.

Generally, a property owner must first pursue and exhaust the administrative remedy available to him under a zoning ordinance or statute before resorting to the courts for other relief from the action or decision of zoning authorities.⁵⁷ Accordingly,

Administrative remedy as precluding relief by:

Declaratory judgment see infra § 339.

Injunction see infra § 344.

Mandamus see infra § 347.

Review by certiorari

(1) Where, under zoning ordinance as amended, pending certiorari to review action of municipal council in denying prosecutor a permit to erect and operate a gas station in business district, all discretion had been removed from municipal council and prosecutor was left to pursue his appropriate remedies before zoning board of adjustment for a variance or exception but no such appeal had been made, certiorari was required to be denied.

N.J.—Krugman v. Municipal Council of City of Clifton, 53 A.2d 803, 136 N.J.Law 32.

(2) Application for certiorari held premature where administrative remedy was not pursued.

N.J.—Payne v. Borough of Sea Bright, 187 A. 627, 14 N.J.Misc. 756.

(3) However, failure of property owners to appeal to board of adjustment from action of building inspector refusing permit to erect a gasoline service station did not require dismissal of writ of certiorari to review action taken, where board's existence was doubtful, and an appeal had been taken to borough council which refused relief.

N.J.—Diller v. Mayor and Council of Borough of Stone Harbor, 3 A.2d 872, 131 N.J.Law 611.

Appeal to board as prerequisite

(1) Where the zoning ordinance is not claimed to be invalid in its entirety but only to be arbitrary in its application to owner's land, and re-judicial relief may not be sought unless the complaining party has first taken proper proceedings for a zoning reclassification,⁵⁸ or to obtain a permit,⁵⁹ exception, or variance;⁶⁰ and compliance with the statutory provisions for an appeal to an administrative body is required before an appeal can be made to the courts from a revocation of a building permit.⁶¹ A party appealing from a zoning decision of a board of adjustment is not required to apply to the board for a rehearing or new trial in order to exhaust his administrative remedies, but need only make a direct appeal to the court from the decision as rendered by the board.⁶²

The rule that administrative remedies must be exhausted before resort is had to the courts in zoning matters is not absolute and without exceptions, and in various circumstances it has been held inapplicable.⁶³ So it has been held that resort to an administrative remedy is not a prerequisite to judicial relief where the question raised is one of interpretation of a statute;⁶⁴ and where an action to compel the issuance of a building permit raises questions of law only and not matters requiring administrative findings of fact or an exercise of administrative discretion, such action is not premature because of failure of the owner of the realty to appeal the building inspector's denial of the permit to the board of adjustment.⁶⁵ Where no administrative remedy was available to petitioner, a proceeding for judicial relief is not barred by failure to exhaust administrative remedies.⁶⁶ lief may be obtained from a local board of adjustment, the court should ordinarily decline to adjudicate an attack on the ordinance until the owner has exhausted his remedy before the board.

N.J.—Conlon v. Board of Public Works of City of Paterson, 94 A.2d 660, 11 N.J. 363.

(2) Owner who asserts that a zoning ordinance is unconstitutional as it applies to his property must first present issue to board of zoning appeals.

Ind.—Town of Homecroft v. Macbeth, 148 N.E.2d 563.

(3) Under some statutes it is held that, if the ordinance in question has any validity as applied to the particular property, recourse to the board of appeals or adjustment is a condition precedent to a judicial review of the decision on the application for a permit.

Premature suit

Owners of lots, buildings on which were destroyed or dislodged from their foundations by a hurricane, were premature in seeking to invalidate subsequent amendments to town zoning ordinances in certiorari proceedings on ground that amendments prohibited town zoning board from granting such owners permission to rebuild and replace buildings on lots, where board had not actually denied them such permission, though town building inspector had denied permits to some of them in accordance with prior emergency ordinance.

Ga.—Toomey v. Norwood Realty Co., 89 S.E.2d 265, 211 Ga. 814.

Absence of provisions for reclassification

One applying to city engineer, pursuant to city ordinance, for permit to construct commercial building on applicant's lot, had right to sue city and its officers for issuance of permit and injunction against interference with use of lot for business purposes, after city council's denial of applica-

Generally, where a constitutional question is involved, equity may act even though by so doing an administrative zoning body is bypassed.⁶⁷ The right to apply for a variance of a zoning ordinance or to review of a determination of a zoning board does not deprive an owner of a cause of action attacking the validity of the zoning ordinance itself,⁶⁸ and the validity of such an ordinance may in a proper case be attacked in a court without first applying to the zoning board of appeals for relief.⁶⁹ Accordingly, a proceeding attacking a zoning ordinance as arbitrary and unreasonable, and as constituting a deprivation of property without due process of law is not subject to objection that the administrative remedy afforded through the local board of adjustment had not been exhausted.⁷⁰

tion, as against contention that plaintiff did not exhaust his administrative remedies by seeking reclassification of property, where ordinance contained no provisions for reclassification, plaintiff having fully exhausted only administrative remedy afforded thereby.

Threatened prosecutions

Plaintiffs were entitled to bring suit for judgment declaring that application of zoning laws to project enlarging swimming pool maintained by them, which project had been commenced prior to enactment of zoning laws, was unconstitutional and that continuance of threatened prosecutions for violation of such laws was abuse of judicial process, without first exhausting administrative remedies before zoning enforcement officials.

Appeal from denial of permit

Where property owner objects to restrictive zoning ordinance he is not required to apply to local board of appeals for a variance but as a matter of right may ask board for permit to build and, on denial, make direct application to the court for relief provided restrictive ordinance is only bar to issuance of permit.

§ 335. Certiorari

In the absence of statutory authority therefor, certiorari usually is not a proper remedy to test the legislative action of a municipality as to zoning.

As a general rule, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, certiorari does not lie to review a purely legislative or administrative action of a municipal council in enacting, amending, or repealing a zoning regulation.⁷¹ Accordingly, where the action of a municipality in changing⁷² or refusing to change,⁷³ the classification of property for zoning purposes is legislative in character, it is not subject to review by certiorari, unless the action is clearly in violation, or in excess, of its legal right to proceed under the enabling act.⁷⁴

In the light of these general principles, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the remedy is

(1) It has been held that Civ.Pract. Act § 1283, providing a substitute for certiorari, mandamus, and other proceedings, does not repeal provision of town law providing for review of decisions of boards of appeals or adjustment by certiorari, and that certiorari is still a proper remedy.

stances and in a proper case, or may not⁸⁶ be a proper remedy for obtaining a review of the action of a board of appeals or adjustment with respect to building or zoning regulations. Under some authorities,⁸⁷ but not under others,⁸⁸ the validity of the ordinance under which the administrative proceedings were held may be attacked in certiorari proceedings.

Under a statute so providing, a court may take additional testimony in the certiorari proceedings,⁸⁹ and adjudicate the rights of the parties as determined from the evidence;⁹⁰ but, where additional evidence is not taken, the scope of review of the court is limited to determining whether the agency was guilty of a manifest abuse of discretion, or an error of law.⁹¹ Under some statutes,⁹² but not under others,⁹³ on review of the board's decision by certiorari, a hearing of the matter de novo is provided for; but, where applicant had ample opportunity to present all his evidence on a particular issue to the board of appeals, the court should not appoint a referee to try the issue de novo.⁹⁴

Where a hearing de novo is not provided for by statute, the inquiry is limited to review of alleged errors of law on the evidence presented by the record, and does not extend to review of questions of fact to be determined by evidence outside the record,⁹⁵ and it has been held that the court will investigate the record only to determine whether or not the board legally exercised, and acted within, its powers.⁹⁶ Where findings by the board are necessary only in so far as they embrace facts known to the members of the board which do not appear in the evidence, the court in a certiorari proceeding may examine the evidence before the board to supplement, as well as to sustain, its findings.⁹⁷

Under particular statutory provisions, a court may hear and consider evidence of alleged irregularities in procedure or of unfairness by an agency, which is not shown in the record,⁹⁸ but the court may not weigh the evidence or determine the facts for itself where the judgment of the agency is in issue.⁹⁹

Persons adversely affected by the actions of zoning agencies may have a status as parties sufficient to entitle them to seek relief in a certiorari proceeding.¹ Under provisions entitling "persons aggrieved" to seek judicial review by certiorari, the proceeding may be brought by a municipal corporation,² town board,³ or adjoining landowner;⁴ and "nearby residents" may have the status of "aggrieved persons" at least until the question of such status is properly raised and presented for adjudication in a particular case.⁵

§ 337. — Grant or Refusal of Permits

Depending on the statutes and ordinances, certiorari may be a proper remedy to review the action of an official or board with respect to a permit under a zoning ordinance; and, where authorized by statute, the court on review may receive additional testimony or try the case de novo.

Where no question of abuse of discretion is presented, the scope of review will be limited to questions of law,⁹ and the court will not substitute its discretion for that of the board.¹⁰ It may be improper for the court to appoint a referee and to decide the case de novo, taking into account the evidence before the referee,¹¹ or for the court to receive additional evidence itself.¹² When it is authorized to do so, however, the court reviewing a decision with respect to a permit may receive additional testimony,¹³ and try the case de novo;¹⁴ and appellant may be entitled as of right to submit evidence to the court where it appears that the board improperly reached its decision without hearing any evidence or affording appellant a hearing.¹⁵

Where contentions of the parties on certiorari are required, by the zoning ordinance, to be specified in the application for the writ, contentions which are not so specified are waived.¹⁶ A court may not consider a contention which was not specified in the application for the writ of certiorari.¹⁷

Since the law in effect at the time of the disposition of the certiorari proceeding governs,¹⁸ the court may be required to consider the matter in the light of an ordinance relating to the issues before it, even though it was enacted after the decision of the administrative agency.¹⁹ The fact that an applicant who has been refused a permit has obtained a writ of certiorari to review the decision does not prevent the administrative official or body whose decision is under review from granting the permit pending the certiorari proceeding.²⁰

Persons entitled to institute proceedings. Property owners and persons having an interest in property affected by the grant of a permit are proper parties to maintain a certiorari proceeding to review such grant.²¹ On the other hand, a pro forma decree corporation, members of which own property in the affected area, but which itself does not own real property or assets of any kind, is not an aggrieved person within a statute authorizing review of the issuance of permits by certiorari.²² Under a lease permitting the lessee to apply for the necessary permits to engage in the gasoline station business, and conferring on him the right to take such action as he deems advisable to enforce the allowance of a permit if he is refused one by the administrative officials, he has sufficient interest in the matter to enforce his rights by certiorari.²³

§ 338. — Grant or Refusal of Variances

In a proper case certiorari, or a proceeding in the nature of certiorari, will lie from a decision with respect to a variance, and the scope of review as well as the procedure will be governed by the usual rules of certiorari subject to special provisions of statutes or ordinances.

Depending on the statutes in the particular jurisdiction and the rules governing the issuance of writs of certiorari generally, certiorari may²⁴ or may

Incorrect description in newspaper notice

Where newspaper notice of hearing on application misdescribed property, failure to make objection to misdescription before board did not result in waiver of right, and landowners were not precluded from making such objection in certiorari proceeding, since misdescription could reasonably have misled landowners to inaction.

Tex.—City of San Angelo v. Boehme Bakery, 190 S.W.2d 67, 144 Tex. 281.

Scope and effect of evidence introduced

On certiorari to review order of board of adjustment, court, in passing on legality of board's order, should not base its judgment solely on evidence adduced before it, but should consider board's verified return along with evidence introduced, and from consideration of whole determine whether board abused its discretion, and court is not to put tute an abuse of discretion.⁶¹ It has been held that a view of the area by the court is independent evidence which the court may consider in arriving at its conclusion.⁶²

While, in the absence of evidence showing the decision of the board to be erroneous, that decision must be accepted as final,⁶³ where additional competent evidence received by the court shows that the board's findings are erroneous the court may overrule them.⁶⁴ It has been said that this power to take additional testimony should be exercised with extreme care where there appears to be a probability that the effect of the additional testimony, if it is received, will be to show that the ruling complained of is erroneous.⁶⁵ On certiorari to review the action of a board in refusing a variance, the court may be required to consider the matter in the light of an ordinance relating to the issues before it, even though it was enacted after the decision of the administrative agency.⁶⁶

Who may institute proceeding. Adjoining and neighboring landowners⁶⁷ whose properties are affected by the decision⁶⁸ are proper persons to institute a certiorari proceeding; and such persons may petition as "aggrieved parties" without allegations of special damage to them resulting from the granting of the variance in question.⁶⁹

§ 339. Declaratory Judgment

- a. In general
- b. Availability or prior use of other remedy

a. In General

Except where a statute provides a different and exclusive remedy, a property owner may properly seek a judgment declaring his rights, status, or other legal relations under a zoning regulation, or declaring it invalid as to particular property; but he must show an actual controversy.

Except where a statute is construed as providing an exclusive remedy of a different nature, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, an action for a declaratory judgment is the, or a, proper remedy of a property owner to have declared his rights, status, or other legal relations under a zoning ordinance or regulation,⁷⁰ or to have the itself in position of board and substitute its discretion for that of board.

Tex.—City of San Angelo v. Boehme Bakery, supra.

Necessity of findings by board

On review of determination of zoning board of appeals exempting property from zoning ordinance for unreasonable hardship, where no findings of fact had been made by the board and no evidence was certified, the court cannot proceed to hear new evidence why a variance should be granted without substituting its own discretion for that of the board.

Board's discretion as controlling

In granting of variance because of unnecessary hardships and practical difficulties in respect of adapting property to conforming use, discretion to be exercised was that of board of standards and appeals and not of referee acting on new evidence and his personal inspection of premises in proceeding for certiorari against board, as opposed to similar inspection by members of board in reaching its determination.

ordinance declared invalid or unconstitutional as applied to particular property.⁷¹ However, a declaration of the invalidity of an ordinance as applied to particular property will not be made where the evidence shows that reasonable men may have a fair difference of opinion concerning the reasonableness of the zoning classification.⁷²

Under a statute empowering courts to declare rights, status, and other legal relations whether or not further relief is, or could be, claimed, a court has jurisdiction of an action for a declaratory judgment involving a zoning ordinance notwithstanding the petition seeks declaration of rights, status, and other legal relations without further relief.⁷³ A plaintiff seeking declaratory relief has been held not required, in the first instance, to enumerate every statute that may be involved.⁷⁴

Md.—Kracke v. Weinberg, 79 A.2d 387, 197 Md. 339.

Nature of action

(1) An action for judgment declaring unconstitutional amended zoning ordinance under which defendants had applied for permits to construct buildings which plaintiff objected to is in all essentials an action for injunction.

Ohio.—Clifton Hills Realty Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 21 N.E.2d 993, 60 Ohio App. 443.

(2) Suit to declare zoning order void is not an appeal on merits of issues presented to zoning commission at its hearing.

D.C.—Lewis v. District of Columbia, 190 F.2d 25, 89 U.S.App.D.C. 72.

Grievance on behalf of large group

Where complaint challenging validity of zoning resolutions could be read as stating grievance on behalf of large group, and more was involved than unique problem of particular land owner, action was premature because plaintiff did not show that he had had any plans under way for new construction or rebuilding, and court could, in exercise of its discretion and on ground of sound public policy, allow remedy of declaratory judgment in order to secure expeditious determination of broad questions presented.

Unapproved sale of property to plaintiff

Fact that sale to plaintiff of property had not been approved by regulatory agency did not bar plaintiff from maintaining action for judgment declaring zoning ordinance and amendment to be unconstitutional.

Grant of variance

Where adjoining property owners attacked, on constitutional grounds, validity of provisions of ordinance under which zoning board of appeals purported to grant a variance, and attacked jurisdiction of board in acting directly on an original application rather than on an appeal from denial of application to board officials, action for a declaratory judgment would lie.

One purchasing property with full knowledge of zoning restrictions has been held barred by such knowledge from seeking a declaratory judgment declaring the restricting ordinance unconstitutional;⁷⁵ but other authority is to the contrary.⁷⁶ An action for a declaratory judgment as to the constitutionality of a zoning ordinance has been held not barred by the failure to raise the question in a prior certiorari proceeding⁷⁷ by a judgment sustaining the denial, by a board of appeals, of a permit to construct a building,⁷⁸ or by a conviction of the property owner in a prior criminal action for failure to obtain a building permit.⁷⁹

Amendment of ordinance. An action for a declaratory judgment is an appropriate procedure to test the validity of an amendment to a zoning ordinance,⁸⁰ unless the statute provides a different remedy,⁸¹ or for determining rights thereunder.⁸²

Actual controversy; hypothetical grounds. An attack on a zoning ordinance, through an action for a declaratory judgment, requires a showing, or allegation, of an actual controversy involving the ordinance attacked;⁸³ so, a petition seeking a definition by the court of certain terms in a zoning ordinance, with such comment as the court may choose to make, presents no ground for a declaratory judgment, where no controversy, actual or threatened, is involved, there is no principle of law to be passed on or applied, and there is no evidence, stipulation, or exhibits before the court.⁸⁴

A challenge of a zoning classification, in an ordinance, which, of necessity, puts in issue the question whether the exercise of the police power is paramount to the rights of the individual presents a real, substantial, and actual controversy;⁸⁵ and a controversy can be found in the interest which

- Plaintiff's intention to sell land
Where plaintiffs claimed that ordinance, in restricting use of their land to single-unit residences was invalid because arbitrary and unreasonable, and defendant county refused to rezone property for industrial use, or to further hear matter, dispute was an actual controversy, notwithstanding fact that plaintiffs the public as a whole has in keeping the zoning regulations of municipalities within lawful bounds, and in not allowing them to become instruments of discrimination or oppression, as opposed to the interest which the municipality may be assumed to have in defending the ordinance which it has, in due form, adopted.⁸⁶

A judgment declaring a zoning ordinance invalid cannot be sought on hypothetical grounds.⁸⁷

b. Availability or Prior Use of Other Remedy

Where a statute provides an exclusive remedy of a different nature, the bringing of an action for a declaratory judgment involving a zoning ordinance is precluded. The prior exhaustion of administrative remedies before zoning enforcement officials is not required, under some statutes, before the bringing of an action for declaratory relief.

Some statutes have been held to provide exclusive remedies so as to preclude the bringing of actions for declaratory judgments involving zoning ordinances;⁸⁸ and declaratory relief has been denied where there is an adequate remedy at law by certiorari or mandamus.⁸⁹ On the other hand, plaintiff is not required to attempt first to seek relief by a legislative change.⁹⁰

Necessity of exhausting administrative remedy. The prior exhaustion of administrative remedies before the zoning enforcement officials,⁹¹ or of remedies allegedly provided by the zoning ordinance,⁹² has been held not required before the bringing of an action for declaratory relief; and, where so provided by statute, a complaint asserting the illegality of a zoning ordinance may be filed in court for, and on behalf of, property owners even though no application for a permit for construction pursuant to the ordinance has been filed.⁹³

The failure to seek a variance does not bar an action to have a zoning ordinance declared unconstitutional where it is attacked in its entirety in so far as it affects an aggrieved party's property;⁹⁴ would sell land once judgment was obtained.

Action in nature of class suit

Ordinarily, landowner who is uniquely affected by zoning regula-and this is particularly true where the amendment attacked was obviously aimed at plaintiff's land.⁹⁵ On the other hand, a landowner seeking a variance from a zoning ordinance has been required to exhaust his administrative remedies before bringing an action for a declaratory judgment determining the force and effect of the ordinance as to his rights.⁹⁶

§ 340. Injunction

Where no other adequate remedy is available and sufficient probability of irreparable injury is shown, injunction may be proper to restrain enforcement of, or official action under, an invalid zoning ordinance.

Broadly speaking, injunction is a proper remedy to test the validity of a zoning ordinance or regulation,⁹⁷ and under general rules stated in Injunctions § 119, with respect to restraining the enforcement of unconstitutional or invalid statutes or ordinances, injunction may be proper to restrain official action under an invalid zoning ordinance.⁹⁸ Thus where the landowner is not estopped to attack the validity of the enactment,⁹⁹ the enforcement of a zoning ordinance or regulation enacted without statutory authority,¹ or without compliance with the required procedure,² may be enjoined. Likewise, injunction may be proper to prevent the enforcement as to particular property of zoning ordinances which are invalid as applied to such property,³ at tion of general import and who suffers unusual hardship because of peculiar application of regulation to his property, must apply for variance before judicial action is open to him; but where plaintiff's action challenging validity of regulation was in nature of class suit, attacking generally application of zoning amendments to considerable area embracing many separate parcels, action could not be dismissed as premature in that he had not exhausted administrative remedy provided for unique situations by applying for variance.

Proceeding held proper

Where present suit to restrain city least where no other adequate remedy is available;⁴ but it has been held that a property owner who has an adequate remedy by proceedings for administrative or judicial review is not entitled to an injunction to restrain enforcement of a zoning ordinance even though he asserts that it is invalid as applied to his property.⁵ A property owner having the right to continue a nonconforming use may be entitled to enjoin enforcement of a zoning ordinance with respect to such use.⁶

General rules discussed in Injunctions § 156 et seq apply in determining whether injunction to prevent enforcement of zoning ordinances is improper as enjoining a criminal prosecution.⁷ Thus, where the threatened enforcement would cause irreparable injury, enforcement may be restrained,⁸ until the issue of validity has been determined,⁹ or pending from enforcing the zoning ordinance whereby plaintiffs' property was restricted to residential use was not filed until after municipal board of appeals had denied present plaintiffs' request for variance that would have authorized the property to be used, but zoning board of appeals record was not before the circuit court in the present suit, the present suit was not an improper attempt to obtain judicial review of decision of zoning board of appeals, but, rather, it called on the court to exercise its traditional role of determining constitutionality of the legislation.

Particular remedy held inadequate

Where mayor and council members were attempting to enforce void zoning ordinance against landowner, who sought to enjoin mayor and council members from interfering with his erection of a filling station, landowner did not have an adequate and complete remedy at law in form of mandamus.

Declaratory judgment

Fact that persons conducting private school on property in city residential district could obtain judicial determination of question whether ordinance amending comprehensive zoning ordinance so as to prohibit use of property in such districts for private schools was arbitrary and discriminatory classification as to such persons by seeking declaratory judgment did not affect their right to injunction against enforcement of amending ordinance, whether in connection with or without seeking declaratory judgment.

an administrative determination and review thereof,¹⁰ notwithstanding the general rule that equity will not enjoin a criminal prosecution; but there is no right to such restraint where the probability of injury is not sufficiently shown.¹¹ It has also been held that a person is not entitled to an injunction to prevent the enforcement of a zoning ordinance where no overt act injuriously affecting his person or property has been committed.¹²

Where the zoning ordinance is not clearly invalid in its application to the petitioner's property, injunctive relief will be denied.¹³ A person is not entitled to an injunction to prevent enforcement of a zoning ordinance on the ground that other violations of the ordinance exist,¹⁴ or on the ground that the acts of administrative officials assured the petitioner that the contemplated use of his property was not prohibited.¹⁵ It has been held that injunction does not lie to prevent the enactment of an ordinance to appropriate property for municipal use, even though the use might violate zoning laws, where no official action directed toward enactment has been taken.¹⁶

Restraining administrative proceedings. The proceedings of administrative bodies in connection with zoning generally will not be restrained unless they are acting without jurisdiction.¹⁷ An administrative board which has statutory jurisdiction to enforce a zoning ordinance will not be prevented by injunction from hearing or acting on a petition to eliminate a violation.¹⁸ An injunction to restrain an administrative board which is validly constituted from considering an application to rezone property may properly be denied;¹⁹ and a landowner is not entitled to an injunction to prevent an administrative body from reviewing, reversing, or rescinding its action in reclassifying his property.²⁰

Rezoning or change of classification. In a proper case rezoning of an area may be compelled by injunction.²¹ Property owners, even though they have no vested or contractual right to keep adjacent property in its present zoning classification, may challenge the validity of an amendment changing such classification.²² Where, however, the enactment of an ordinance rezoning certain property is within the legislative discretion, a person whose property was not rezoned is not entitled to injunction to prevent its implementation,²³ or to require a different classification of neighboring property.²⁴

§ 341. — Issuance or Revocation of Permits

Injunction may be a proper remedy to compel or prevent the issuance or revocation of permits.

The validity of a statute or ordinance which is made the ground for denial of a permit may be challenged by a proceeding for a mandatory injunction directing issuance of the permit;²⁵ but where a permit has been properly refused under a regulation which became effective after application and before denial, issuance of a permit will not be compelled.²⁶ In general, a person dissatisfied with official action with respect to the issuance or revocation of a permit is not entitled to injunction where an adequate remedy at law is available.²⁷ The issuance of a

would be inadequate.³⁶ It has been held that in order to warrant injunctive relief, the permit holder must have done some act under the permit;³⁷ and an injunction prohibiting use of property will not be granted where no intention to violate the law is shown.³⁸

The holder of an outstanding permit which is not affected by subsequently enacted zoning ordinances may not be prevented by injunction from exercising his rights under the permit.³⁹

§ 343. — Matters and Issues Considered

In an injunction proceeding for relief from building and zoning regulations or decisions, the court should not consider or determine issues exclusively within the province of an administrative body, or which are appropriately determined only in proceedings at law.

In a proceeding to enjoin enforcement of zoning laws the court should not consider or determine issues which are to be determined exclusively by an administrative body,⁴⁰ or which are appropriately determined only in proceedings at law.⁴¹ Likewise, the wisdom of enacting a zoning ordinance, which is a matter for the legislative body, will not be considered,⁴² and the court will not substitute its judgment for that of the legislative body unless its action clearly appears to be arbitrary or unreasonable.⁴³ A suit for injunction in which it is contended that a zoning order is void is not an appeal on the merits of the issues presented to the zoning authorities.⁴⁴

In determining the validity of a zoning ordinance in a proceeding to enjoin its enforcement the effect of the classification of property on its worth to the owner may be considered,⁴⁵ and the effect of preventing enforcement against petitioner on the rights of other landowners in the vicinity must be considered.⁴⁶ In considering the validity of a zoning amendment, the statutory requirements for notice and hearing which existed at the time proceedings to amend the ordinance were begun will be applied.⁴⁷

Where the proceeding involves a review of the exercise of discretion by a zoning board the court should consider only the record which was before the board,⁴⁸ and should not substitute its discretion for that of the board.⁴⁹ A judgment affirming administrative action denying a permit for a nonconforming use may be conclusive in a subsequent proceeding brought by the applicant to enjoin interference with the applicant's use of the property.⁵⁰

§ 344. — Exhaustion of Other Remedies

In general, a person seeking an injunction in a zoning case must have exhausted other remedies which are available to him unless he contends that the ordinance or administrative action attacked is absolutely void.

A zoning ordinance or a portion thereof which is absolutely invalid may generally be attacked by an injunction proceeding without prior resort to administrative or other legal remedies.⁵¹ Likewise, a property owner who seeks to enjoin use of another's property under permission granted by zoning authorities which is alleged to be absolutely void for lack of jurisdiction is not required to exhaust the remedy by appeal from the official action;⁵² and where the action of an official in attempting to revoke a permit is absolutely void, no appeal from his action is necessary as a prerequisite to a proceeding to enjoin interference with the use of property under the permit.⁵³

On the other hand, where the ordinance or administrative action is invalid only as applied to particular property, the ordinary administrative remedies, followed by judicial review of the administrative action, generally must be exhausted before a petitioner may be entitled to injunctive relief to prevent enforcement,⁵⁴ or to prevent use of property under a permit or other official authorization,⁵⁵ or to compel revocation of a permit.⁵⁶ It has been held, however, that property owners who are not seeking permits are not required to take an administrative appeal to a body which cannot determine the validity of an ordinance as applied to their property before seeking to enjoin enforcement;⁵⁷ and some authorities hold that, while a landowner may not enjoin enforcement of a regulation rezoning land until he has been granted or denied a variance by the board of zoning appeals,⁵⁸ he need not exhaust the remedy of judicial relief by appeal under the zoning law before attacking the validity of the administrative action by proceedings for injunction.⁵⁹

Where it is not shown that the zoning ordinance provides for administrative review of the official action in question,⁶⁰ or where the petitioner is not one of the persons entitled to the remedy provided,⁶¹ or where, without fault of the petitioner, the remedy provided for by the zoning law is not available,⁶² relief may be obtained in injunction proceedings. Where there is an independent ground of equity jurisdiction, a court may enjoin officials from proceeding under an invalid zoning enactment even though the petitioner has not exhausted his administrative remedies.⁶³

§ 345. Mandamus

Mandamus may lie to compel the performance of official duties with respect to the enactment of zoning ordinances, but such an action does not lie to compel zoning authorities to do an act not within the powers given them by statute, or to perform duties under an invalid ordinance.

As a general rule, mandamus may lie to compel the performance of official duties with respect to the enactment of zoning ordinances.⁶⁴ So, where a municipality has created a housing authority and has obligated itself by contract with the authority to zone and rezone property acquired by the authority, mandamus lies to compel the enactment of the appropriate ordinances.⁶⁵ Mandamus does not lie, however, to compel zoning authorities to do an act not within the powers given them by statute,⁶⁶ or to perform duties under an invalid ordinance.⁶⁷ It has also been held that municipal authorities cannot be compelled by mandamus to enact a rezoning ordinance,⁶⁸ and in the absence of an abuse of discretion official action with respect to rezoning will not be reviewed in mandamus proceedings.⁶⁹ Where an ordinance provides for the creation of a special zoning district within a residential district on petition of all the owners within the proposed special district, officials will not be compelled to establish the special district on petition of only some of the property owners.⁷⁰

Licenses. Where the propriety of issuing a license to operate a business depends on whether zoning ordinances would be violated, mandamus will be issued to compel issuance or revocation of such a license only when the applicant for mandamus shows a clear legal right to relief.⁷¹

Scope of inquiry. Where on an application for mandamus the propriety of administrative action based on evidence is questioned, the applicant ordinarily is not entitled to a trial de novo.⁷² If, however, no hearing is required as a prerequisite to the administrative determination, the rule that the court is limited to the record below is inapplicable,⁷³ and, in such case, the court may conduct a full hearing when requested to do so whether or not some sort of hearing was in fact held before the administrative officer.⁷⁴ Where a trial de novo is proper because an administrative agency acted arbitrarily, capriciously, or fraudulently, the court may consider independent evidence, including a view of the premises.⁷⁵

In a proceeding by mandamus to determine the validity of a statute or ordinance, issues which must be raised by certiorari to review an administrative decision will not be considered.⁷⁶ Where a property owner seeks relief against a city zoning ordinance by mandamus, the question for determination is whether the allegedly unreasonable and confiscatory restriction is general to the locality or peculiar and unique to the petitioner's property.⁷⁷ Where mandamus is sought to compel issuance of a permit on the ground that the ordinance relied on in refusing the permit is invalid, the court is not bound by a determination of the authorities that a permit should not be issued because the use to be made of the property is not permitted by the ordinance.⁷⁸

§ 346. — Issuance of Permits

Where no other adequate remedy is available and a clear right to relief is shown, mandamus may lie to compel official action with respect to the issuance of permits under building and zoning laws or ordinances.

The general rules governing the issuance of mandamus, discussed in Mandamus §§ 17-68, apply as to the issuance of mandamus to compel the grant of a permit required by building and zoning regulations.⁷⁹ Thus, mandamus will not issue unless the

Matters not justifying relief

(1) Conditions which might prevent a prospective store operator from securing a desirable location in a commercial zone do not justify such prospective proprietor in demanding by mandamus that a particular location in a residential district be opened up for commercial use.

Cal.—Safeway Stores v. City Council of City of San Mateo, 194 P.2d 720, 86 C.A.2d 277.

(2) Whether unimproved suburban lot in city residential zone would be of greater value for business use or application of zoning ordinance thereto may lessen value thereof is immaterial in mandamus proceeding to require city to rezone lot from residential to local retail status.

Tex.—Harmon v. City of Dallas, Civ. App., 229 S.W.2d 825, refused no reversible error.

Motives of board

In action by landowner to compel board of county commissioners to rezone land, motives of board in rejecting planning commission's recommendation were not pertinent.

Where refusal of clerk of city council to issue license to plaintiff to operate a tourist home was based on city council's action in cancelling a previous license and rezoning of plaintiff's property into area zoned for residential purposes, clerk could not seek to defeat plaintiff's right to mandamus requiring issuance of the license on ground that application was not in form prescribed by city ordinances.

Legal issue only

Where there was no disputed fact and the sole question was construction of language of ordinance, a legal question, mandamus was proper remedy to compel issuance of permit; mere urging of possibility of different construction of zoning ordinance is insufficient to vitiate clear legal right to permit arising from proper legal construction of ordinance and which right calls for no exercise of discretion on part of person or officer charged with duty so as to preclude resort to mandamus.

wrong.⁸⁶ Also, relief may be denied where it would permit the petitioner to take advantage of his own inequitable conduct.⁸⁷ So, mandamus will not issue where the only effect would be to permit the relator to do a thing already done without a permit and in violation of law⁸⁸ and thus permit him to take advantage of his own wrongful act.⁸⁹

The ministerial duty of acting on an application for a permit may be enforced by mandamus,⁹⁰ and likewise an administrative agency which has the duty to review the refusal of a permit may be compelled to render a decision.⁹¹ Where a particular use of property does not in fact violate a zoning ordinance, an official may be compelled to issue a certificate to that effect,⁹² and mandamus may issue in such circumstances to enforce the issuance of a certificate of occupancy.⁹³ However, an officer may not be compelled to act on an application which does not conform to the standards prescribed by the ordinance.⁹⁴

In general, where the right to a permit is made absolute on a showing that there has been a compliance with the requirements of the statutes or municipal ordinances, the duty of boards or officers to issue the permit is ministerial and mandamus will issue to compel the performance of this duty.⁹⁵

(7) Applicant, however, has been held entitled to mandamus to secure building permit without waiting for legislature to enact statutes pursuant to zoning amendments to constitution.

N.J.—Advance Development Corporation v. Mayor and Aldermen of Jersey City, 140 A. 788, 6 N.J. Misc. 238, appeal dismissed 143 A. 447, 105 N.J. Law 234.

(8) Where relator knew before exercising option to purchase premises for use as a filling station that proposed township ordinance would prohibit such use, and ordinance was finally passed shortly after return day of rule to show cause why mandamus directing issuance of permit enacted after the application for mandamus, the writ will not be issued.⁶

Testing validity of ordinance. Generally, in the absence of estoppel,⁷ the issue of validity of a zoning ordinance may be raised in a proceeding for mandamus to compel the issuance of a permit.⁸

Preventing issuance of permit. Where no other remedy is provided, neighboring landowners may bring mandamus to prevent the granting of a building permit under an allegedly invalid amendment of a zoning bylaw.⁹ Mandamus will be granted to compel the rescission of a resolution or order authorizing issuance of a building permit only where the petitioner shows a clear right to relief.¹⁰

§ 347. — Existence of Other Remedy

Generally, mandamus does not lie to compel, or to restrain, the issuance of a permit provided for by the building and zoning laws where there is another adequate remedy available, as by administrative appeal, unless, under the circumstances, such remedy is unavailable or is inadequate.

As a general rule, mandamus does not lie to compel the issuance of a permit provided for by the building and zoning laws,¹¹ or to restrain such isshould not issue, writ would be discharged.

W.Va.—Carter v. City of Bluefield, 54 S.E.2d 747, 132 W.Va. 881.

Circumstances held to raise estoppel

(1) Where landowner sought building permit under town building code, landowner could not, subsequently in mandamus proceeding, claim that building code was unconstitutional because no appeal from building commission was provided.

Conn.—State ex rel. La Voie v. Building Commission of Town of Trumbull, 65 A.2d 165, 135 Conn. 415.

(2) Where city rezoned property from residential to manufacturing use and plaintiff purchased property in reliance on manufacturing classification and thereafter city again rezoned property as residential, city was not permitted to collaterally attack validity of prior rezoning ordinance.

Ill.—People ex rel. Joseph Lumber Co. v. City of Chicago, 83 N.E.2d 592, 402 Ill. 321.

Circumstances held not to work estoppel

(1) In mandamus proceedings by landowner against building inspector of city to compel him to issue a building permit, city was not estopped to deny validity of zoning ordinances, on which landowner relied, because of fact that landowner had made a written offer to city planning commission that he would build a bridge at his own expense if city would grant his request to zone his property for business without a time limit, and city accepted such offer, and improvements were made by landowner.

Okl.—Voight v. Saunders, 243 P.2d 654, 206 Okl. 318.

(2) Action of petitioners in applying to city manager for a zoning permit, in appealing from his adverse ruling to zoning board of adjustment, and in applying without success to board of directors for an amendment of ordinance to permit petitioners to use their property in a residential zone for business purposes, did not estop petitioners to attack validity of ordinance in mandamus proceeding subsequently brought against board of directors of city.

W.Va.—Carter v. City of Bluefield, 54 S.E.2d 747, 132 W.Va. 881.

(3) Petitioner was not estopped to attack validity of an ordinance other than one under which he sought a permit.

N.Y.—Lyle v. Avis, 148 N.Y.S.2d 874.

Okl.—Voight v. Saunders, 243 P.2d 654, 206 Okl. 318.

Issue held not raised

Where township had separate building code and zoning ordinance and two were tied together with single enforcement administrator and a single board of appeals to review action taken by inspector or administrator under either or both ordinances, and zoning ordinance did not require building permit as was required by building code, and city owning land in township made application for building permit under building code and made no application under zoning ordinance, mandamus proceeding by city to compel issuance of building permit raised no issue whether zoning ordinance created valid restriction as to use of city's property but only issue whether permit should have been issued under building code.

Administrative procedure held proper

In proceeding for writ of mandamus to compel city planning commission to set aside decision granting use permit to telephone company for construction of addition to its building in R-3 residential zone, record disclosed that protestants had had a full fair hearing and that commission had not acted summarily.

Cal.—McLain v. Planning Commission of City of Chico, App., 319 P.2d 24.

Final determination on application for alternative writ

Where, on motion for alternative writ of mandate to review decision of county board of supervisors granting cemetery permit and zoning exception, all parties were before court and full transcripts of proceedings before regional planning commission and board were attached as exhibits to petition, trial court could make a final determination as to whether a peremptory writ should issue.

Declaratory judgment

Right to obtain relief by mandamus could not be denied on theory that owner would have an adequate remedy in an action for declaratory judgment.

Wis.—State ex rel. Scandrett v. Nelson, 3 N.W.2d 765, 240 Wis. 438.

Where no existing statute or ordinance provides for appeal from de-suance,¹² where there is another adequate remedy available, as where the statute makes provision for an appeal to another governmental or administrative agency.¹³ Where the law and the facts are clear, however, mandamus may lie without first exhausting the administrative appeal, since the rule requiring exhaustion of such remedy is one of policy and discretion rather than of law.¹⁴ Also, the right to mandamus is not barred where, under the circumstances, another remedy, as by administrative appeal, is unavailable or is inadequate.¹⁵

According to some authorities, where a permit is denied on the basis of a statute or ordinance, the validity of the regulation may be questioned in a direct proceeding for mandamus without resorting to the procedure for administrative review;¹⁶ and resort need not be had to an administrative appellate board before bringing mandamus if such board could not pass on the validity of the ordinance.¹⁷ It has been held, however, that an apcision of adjustment board, mandamus may be maintained to review its refusal of a permit.

Limited review available

Where administrative appellate board could review only some of issues and applicant would have right to go to courts for review of others, court will take jurisdiction of entire controversy even though applicant failed to seek relief from administrative appeal board.

N.Y.—Cherry v. Brumbaugh, 7 N.Y.S.2d 956, 255 App.Div. 880—Radpllicant for a building permit whose application was refused because of a zoning ordinance may not secure mandamus compelling issuance of the permit on the ground that the ordinance as a whole is unconstitutional without first exhausting administrative remedies provided by the ordinance if such remedies might enable the applicant to secure the permit.¹⁸

Certiorari or mandamus. Certiorari, where available, may preclude mandamus,¹⁹ and it has been held that certiorari, not mandamus, is the proper method for review of the refusal of a board to grant a permit,²⁰ although in particular circumstances, mandamus rather than certiorari may be the proper remedy.²¹

§ 348. — Revocation of Permits

In a proper case, revocation of permits or restoration of rights under permits improperly revoked may be compelled by mandamus.

Generally, the court has discretion as to the issuance of mandamus to compel the revocation of a permit provided for by the building and zoning laws.²² Mandamus will not issue to compel the revocation of a building permit for a defect which has been corrected or which the parties are ready and willing to correct.²³ A building inspector will not be compelled by mandamus to revoke a building permit unless the construction authorized by it so clearly violates the building regulations as to endanger public health, safety, or welfare.²⁴

Where another adequate remedy is available, mandamus will not lie to compel the revocation of a permit;²⁵ and an application for mandamus to compel a building superintendent to revoke a building license will be denied in advance of a review of his action by the board of appeals provided for by statute.²⁶ However, where no other remedy is available, mandamus may lie to compel the revocation of a building permit.²⁷ In a mandamus proceeding to revoke a permit defendant may contend that the proposed building is not in violation of the zoning ordinance, even though this issue has not been passed on in any administrative proceeding.²⁸ Where the decision to revoke or not to revoke a permit is discretionary, mandamus will not lie to review the determination unless there has been an abuse of discretion.²⁹

Legal or constitutional questions involved in mandamus proceeding to compel issuance of a building permit are not subject matter for determination of zoning board, and hence application for writ of mandamus before resorting to board was not premature.

Relief from improper revocation. Where a building permit has been improperly revoked, mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the issuance of another permit³⁰ unless another adequate remedy is available.³¹ So, where relator has acquired vested property rights in reliance on the permit, mandamus may lie to cancel the revocation and reinstate the permit;³² but a peremptory writ in advance of a trial will not issue where questions of fact have not been determined.³³

§ 349. — Granting of Variances

The exercise of official discretion in deciding whether a variance or exception under the zoning laws should be allowed may be controlled by mandamus only where there has been an abuse of discretion.

Where officials authorized to grant a variance or exception under the zoning laws unreasonably refuse to do so they may be compelled by mandamus;³⁴ but the exercise of official discretion in deciding whether a variance or exception should be allowed will not be controlled by mandamus in the absence of an abuse of discretion,³⁵ especially where a statutory remedy for review is available.³⁶ Mandamus to compel the granting of a variance is a proper remedy to test the validity of an ordinance which makes no provision for a variance,³⁷ and the applicant need not first seek review by administrative officials who have no power to amend the ordinance.³⁸

On the other hand, according to some authority, where the ordinance provides for the granting of variances or exceptions the validity of the ordinance may not be challenged by mandamus to compel the granting of a variance,³⁹ since the application for a variance admits the validity of the ordinance.⁴⁰ There is also authority, however, that mandamus to require granting of a variance is proper where the ordinance is invalid for want of sufficient standards to guide the exercise of administrative discretion.⁴¹ statute as to the court where the remedy is to be had, and the time and manner of asserting a right of review have been held to be mandatory and jurisdictional.⁴³ So, where the right to appeal from the decision of a zoning board is conferred by statute, it cannot be created by waiver when it is not exercised in accordance with statute.⁴⁴

It has been held, however, that appeals from decisions of the board of adjustment to the courts are somewhat informal and are not to be measured by the strict rules ordinarily applied to the removal of cases on appeal from court to court;⁴⁵ and where the papers on review are timely served and sufficiently advise the board of the relief sought, any irregularity or defect in form may be disregarded.⁴⁶ Where a statute gives a court jurisdiction of appeals from zoning boards, a failure to comply strictly with the requirements of the statute may render the decision of the court erroneous, but does not deprive the court of jurisdiction of the subject matter.⁴⁷

Cost bond or recognizance. Where not required by statute or rule of court, a cost bond need not be filed by a person appealing from a decision of a zoning board of adjustment.⁴⁸ Under a statute allowing costs to the prevailing party on an appeal in a zoning case, it is not mandatory that the court order petitioner to file a recognizance,⁴⁹ and the lack of a recognizance does not defeat the petition.⁵⁰

§ 351. Jurisdiction

Review of zoning action may be had only in courts of competent jurisdiction, and, if these are designated specifically by the statute, no other court may act.

Jurisdiction of particular courts to entertain proceedings for the review of zoning regulations and decisions may be conferred by constitutional or statutory provision,⁵¹ and review may not be had in courts not so authorized.⁵² Prohibition does not lie to prohibit a judge from taking jurisdiction of a mandamus proceeding to compel the city council to repeal a zoning ordinance and to adopt a substitute ordinance where prior litigation has not involved the constitutionality of the ordinance.⁵³

After the zoning board pursuant to notice of appeal from its decision lodges the transcript of the proceedings before it with the court, the court obtains jurisdiction in the matter and may make such orders as are provided for in the statutes covering civil procedure.⁵⁴ Where the court in proceedings to review the decision of a zoning board had jurisdiction over the adverse parties and the board which had notice of the filing of the petition for review, and the parties were before the court when a special judge was selected and qualified, the court had jurisdiction to try the case.⁵⁵ Even though a court has jurisdiction of the case, it is without jurisdiction to make a mandatory order directed to a person not a party to the proceedings.⁵⁶

Preliminary objections. A question of the right of a person to invoke the jurisdiction of a court for the determination of the validity of a zoning ordinance has been held not to be a proper question to be raised preliminarily under a statute relating to the jurisdiction of a court over defendant or the cause of action.⁵⁷

Transfer of cause. Where so provided by statute, a proceeding to review a determination of a zoning board ordinarily is properly disposed of in the trial court rather than transferred to an intermediate appellate court;⁵⁸ but such a transfer is required under conditions specified in the statute,⁵⁹ as where there was a hearing held and evidence taken by the zoning board and it is claimed that there was a failure to prove facts sufficient to sustain the determination made, or that the determination was contrary to the weight of evidence.⁶⁰ The mere fact that review is sought of a determination of a zoning board following a hearing held pursuant to statutory direction does not require a transfer of jurisdiction under the statute.⁶¹

Questions for trial court

Where challenged determination of board of zoning appeals was made as result of hearing held and at which evidence was taken pursuant to statutory direction, court must determine whether there was any competent proof of all facts necessary to be proved in order to authorize making of determination and whether, on all evidence, there was such preponderance of proof against existence of any necessary fact that a verdict affirming existence of such fact would be set aside as against weight of evidence, and, if either of such issues is raised, order should be made transferring proceeding for disposition to appellate division.

eral court will not exercise its discretion to enjoin such construction in the absence of a showing that the rights of the parties seeking relief are being prejudiced, and either that there is no adequate machinery in the state system to protect those rights, or that petitioners are prevented from availing themselves of it, or that bias, unfairness, or prejudice in the state system of review prevents a fair and impartial consideration of their claims, or that petitioners will suffer immediate and irreparable injury.⁶³ It has been held that a federal court should in comity decline jurisdiction of an injunction suit involving the administration of a zoning ordinance where an appeal is pending in a state court from a judgment in a suit for the same relief and against the same defendant, and raising the same issues.⁶⁴

§ 352. Parties

Only necessary or proper parties may be joined in a judicial proceeding to review zoning regulations or decisions, and indispensable parties must be joined in order to render the review proceedings valid.

In accordance with the rule governing civil actions generally, only necessary or proper parties may be joined in a judicial proceeding to review zoning regulations or decisions,⁶⁵ and indispensable parties must be joined in order to render the review proceedings valid.⁶⁶ A statutory requirement that all adverse parties of record to the zoning proceedings be made parties defendant on review is mandatory.⁶⁷ So, where an appeal is taken from a decision of a zoning body granting a permit, the permittee is a necessary and indispensable party.⁶⁸ A declaratory judgment as to the validity of a zoning ordinance or regulation may not be granted where the necessary parties are not brought into the action.⁶⁹

Under some statutes it has been held that neither the members of the zoning board⁷⁰ nor the board itself⁷¹ is a proper party to judicial proceedings to review its decisions; and the board has been held not to be a necessary party to an action against the municipality challenging the validity of the zoning ordinance,⁷² or an action against a property owner to enjoin construction of a building for which a variance was granted.⁷³ Under other statutes it is held that the zoning board is entitled to appear

Persons held necessary parties

Conn.—Charles P. Dunn Co. v. City of Hartford, 111 A.2d 813, 19 Conn. Sup. 291.

(2) Court would not assume jurisdiction of declaratory judgment action, wherein plaintiffs sought to obtain decree that amendment to zoning ordinance was invalid, in view of fact that owners of re-zoned lots were not made parties defendant, but that action was brought against city alone.

N.Y.—Turner v. City of Peekskill, 124 N.Y.S.2d 24.

Persons held not necessary parties

(1) In trucking company's action against municipality for judgment declaring zoning regulation void, other residents and property owners affected by change, if it was void, were not "necessary parties," since municipality represented residents and property owners within its boundaries at least in so far as relief to company was concerned. Conn.—National Transp. Co. v. Toquet, 196 A. 344, 123 Conn. 468.

(2) A trucking company was not entitled to judgment declaring change in zoning regulation void where other property owners affected by change were not made parties to action and were not given notice of pendency thereof, since parties having a direct interest in subject matter of action must be made parties or have reasonable notice thereof, even though their presence is not necessary to a decision of issues between parties of record.

and be heard on an appeal from its action or decision,⁷⁴ and the board may properly be made a party defendant.⁷⁵ Where property owners, who are interested in preventing the certification of a petition calling for an initiative election on an ordinance to repeal a zoning ordinance, bring an action to prevent the submission of the petition to the election board, members of the initiating commission have been held entitled, as individuals, and as commission members, to defend the action.⁷⁶

Suits involving the validity of zoning ordinances are usually and properly brought against the enacting municipality itself.⁷⁷ Under some authorities,⁷⁸ but not under others,⁷⁹ a municipality is the proper party defendant on review of a determination of the zoning board of the municipality. It has also been held that while a city is not a necessary or indispensable party to an action to review a decision of a board of adjustment and a resolution of the city council approving the decision, it is a proper party, where it has an interest in the eventual outcome of the proceedings.⁸⁰

Intervention. Property owners in the vicinity of the affected land, and other interested persons may, in a proper case, be permitted to intervene as parties in a proceeding to review a decision of a zoning body⁸¹ or an action for a declaratory judgment as to the validity of a zoning ordinance.⁸² However, the matter is one within the discretion of the court,⁸³ and intervention will not be permitted where it is unnecessary or improper.⁸⁴

Bringing in new parties. Proper practice may require the court to cause a permittee, who is not a

Tex.—Board of Adjustment of City of Forth Worth v. Stovall, 216 S. W.2d 171, 147 Tex. 366.

Reasons for rule

City board of adjustment in determining whether zoning variance should be granted is engaged in a delegated policy-making function which is an essential part of proper administration of zoning ordinance; the public, as well as affected private parties, has an interest in upholding board's order if valid; and board itself is proper party to represent this public interest when its order is under review.

Tex.—Board of Adjustment of City of Fort Worth v. Stovall, supra.

Parties on both sides

Statute providing that any person aggrieved by a decision of board may appeal contemplates that there will be parties on both sides of suit and that members of board will be made parties.

Mass.—Cefalo v. Board of Appeal of Boston, 124 N.E.2d 247, 332 Mass. 178.

Better practice

In action to review validity of township committee's resolution granting variance, inclusion of record made before board of adjustment did not require that board be denominated an indispensable party, although better practice would have been to make board a party defendant since it was a proper party.

party to the action, to be cited into the case as a party.⁸⁵ However, it has been held that property owners, who are seeking to compel the issuance of a permit, are not required to cite in adjacent property owners who might be adversely affected by the grant of the permit.⁸⁶ Where a question of traffic hazards is involved in a proceeding to review the grant of a permit, the court may require the municipality concerned with the matter to be made a party.⁸⁷

Representative or class actions. Under some statutes, one or more persons may maintain a representative or class action for a declaratory judgment that a zoning ordinance is unconstitutional for the benefit of himself or themselves and all others similarly situated.⁸⁸ However, an action for a declaratory judgment that a zoning ordinance is unconstitutional is improperly brought as a representative action where no controversy is alleged to exist between anyone except the individual plaintiff and defendant.⁸⁹

Remonstrants. It has been held that remonstrants, who appeared before a zoning board and received a favorable decision therein, are not aggrieved parties entitled to a review of such decisions, but they will be permitted to appear in the discretion of the court.⁹⁰

§ 353. Time for Proceedings

A person seeking judicial review of a regulation or decision of a zoning body must act promptly and seasonably, and the proceedings must be instituted within the time limited by statute.

As a general rule, a person seeking judicial review of a zoning determination of zoning officials, a board of appeals, or a governing body of a municipality,⁹¹ or a determination of the validity of a zoning ordinance,⁹² must act promptly and seasonably in instituting the proceedings for review. So, the action ordinarily must be commenced within the period of time prescribed by statute or rule of court,⁹³ and such regulations as to time for suit have been construed and applied in numerous cases.⁹⁴ While a statutory requirement as to time of suit has been held to be mandatory⁹⁵ and jurisdictional,⁹⁶ some provisions limiting the time for review of the determination of a zoning body have been held not to bar suit where facts are pleaded which show that the zoning authority acted in such an illegal manner as to cause its orders to be void, or that it has upset vested rights in violation of the constitution.⁹⁷

fect,⁹⁸ where a statute requires that a petition for review be presented to a court within a specified time, filing of the petition with the clerk of that court is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction.⁹⁹ Where a statute governing a function of a zoning commission does not make provision for a rehearing of its decision, the time for appeal runs from the date of its original decision, and not from the time an application for a rehearing of the decision is denied;¹ hence, an appeal taken after the expiration of the statutory period following the original order is too late, even though such period has not

Rules of board in conflict with statute limiting time for appeals are ineffective to extend time for appeal to court from decision of board.

No power of abatement

Rule limiting period of time in which proceeding may be brought may not be relaxed, hence jurisdiction of court to entertain proceedings could not be invoked after lapse of such time, and court had no power to abate rule in order to permit complaint to stand.

elapsed since the entry of an order confirming the original order.² The failure to file a required document within the time prescribed by statute may be fatal to an appeal,³ and the defect is not cured by the filing of the document thereafter.⁴

The running of time for taking an appeal is not suspended by appellant electing to pursue a different remedy to which he was not entitled.⁵ Under a statute requiring proceedings for review to be commenced within a stated time after the accrual of the right to such review, it has been held that the time commences to run with the granting of a variance, and not with the granting of a permit pursuant to the variance.⁶ Where a statute authorizes an appeal to be taken within a specified time after the filing of a decision of a zoning board, the time for taking the appeal does not begin to run until the required decision is filed.⁷

Where a statute or court rule provides for judicial review of a decision of a zoning board within a specified number of days after notice of the decision is given to the applicant therefor and the decision is filed and published, in the absence of such notice and filing, the mere denial of the application is insufficient to start the period running.⁸ A statute requiring an appeal from a decision to be taken within a specified time after a stated event has been construed to authorize the appeal to be taken before the event occurs.⁹

Since a zoning ordinance is a restriction on the future use of property, and if it remains unchallenged, a property owner may, at a future time, be regarded as being in laches, an attack on the validity of an ordinance, brought before any administrative decisions are made thereunder, has been held not to be premature.¹⁰ An action brought to determine the validity of a zoning ordinance is not premature, even though the ordinance does not have legal effect because it was not properly enacted.¹¹

Excuses for delay. The fact that a zoning board in adopting its decision failed to find the required jurisdictional facts therefor does not excuse a delay in commencing review proceedings.¹² The failure of appellant to file a certified copy of a resolution of a zoning authority within a specified time after its adoption is not excused by a delay in the formal adoption of the resolution until shortly before the expiration of that period of time, where appellant had sufficient time thereafter to perfect the appeal,¹³ especially where appellant did not take affirmative action to have the adoption made at an earlier date.¹⁴

Method of raising objections. Under a particular local practice, an objection that a proceeding for review is not timely is required to be made by a motion before pleading, or by a pleading itself,¹⁵ and, where the objection is not so raised, it is deemed to have been waived.¹⁶

Amended petition. Where the record does not disclose a contention that the original petition was not filed in time, and it does not appear that the amended petition states a new cause of action or changes the issues presented by the original petition, the amended petition relates back to the time that the original was filed,¹⁷ and is timely.¹⁸

§ 354. — Effect of Delay

Delay for an unreasonable period of time in instituting proceedings for relief from a zoning regulation or decision may constitute laches or inequitable conduct barring judicial relief.

Even apart from any statutory limitation of the time within which to apply for review, delay for an unreasonable period of time in seeking relief from a decision of a zoning body,¹⁹ or in seeking a determination of the invalidity of a properly enacted zoning ordinance,²⁰ may constitute laches or inequitable conduct barring relief. So, a delay in seeking a declaration as to the validity of a properly enacted zoning ordinance until after expenditures are incurred and improvements made in reliance thereon has been held to be inequitable,²¹ and to constitute a basis for estoppel;²² and a municipality which remains silent while improvements are made on property, and expenses incurred, in reliance on a building permit, may be barred by laches from having the permit revoked.²³

On the other hand, mere delay by a party in attacking the validity of a zoning bylaw or regulation, without a showing that any prejudice thereby resulted to the municipality has been held not to constitute laches,²⁴ especially where the bylaw cannot lawfully be applied to the property in question.²⁵ Laches has been held not to preclude a party, complaining of the action of a zoning board, from insisting that it comply with specific applicable provisions of a zoning ordinance.²⁶

§ 355. Process or Other Notice

Mandatory provisions relating to filing or service of process or other notice must be complied with in order to give the court jurisdiction.

Where so provided by statute, an appeal from a zoning regulation or decision is perfected by the proper filing of a notice or claim of appeal;²⁷ and provisions governing the contents of a statement of appeal in a zoning case must be complied with in order to confer jurisdiction on the reviewing court.²⁸ Under a particular statutory provision, a notice of appeal is not required to state the grounds of the appeal,²⁹ but it is required to describe the final order of the zoning board which is being appealed from.³⁰ In a proper case, the court may allow a notice of appeal to be amended.³¹

The notice of appeal or other process may be required to be served on the zoning official or board whose decision is sought to be reviewed,³² as well as on the person granted relief by the zoning body,³³ and neighboring property owners who entered an appearance in the proceedings being reviewed.³⁴ Under a statute which provides for notice to the attorney general or other public officer where the validity of an ordinance is questioned, a failure to give notice of proceedings for a declaratory judgment involving the validity of a zoning ordinance constitutes grounds for a denial of the application for declaratory relief.³⁵ An order of a court commanding respondent to send up a record of proceedings before it and to enter an appearance in court has been held to be in the nature of a citation or summons issued on a petition for a new trial, and not to be a service of process for the purpose of bringing it into court as in an independent action.³⁶

Compliance must be had with provisions as to the time for giving parties of record notice of the appeal,³⁷ but where a zoning statute is silent as to the time when, after an appeal is entered, notice shall be given to respondent, it may be given at any reasonable time thereafter.³⁸

An irregularity and defect in the papers served may be disregarded where they are sufficient to advise the party of the relief sought.³⁹ A defect relating to the summons, affecting the jurisdiction of the court, is waived by a general appearance, where counsel for the party complaining of the defect actively engaged in the litigation.⁴⁰

Writ of certiorari to review an order of a board of appeals upholding an order of a building inspector may properly be addressed in the name of the state, directed to the building inspector by name, and to the board as an entity, without naming its members.⁴¹ Service of a writ directed to a board of appeals on its chairman is sufficient where the performance of his official duty will cause the record to be produced.⁴²

§ 356. Pleadings

The propriety and sufficiency of the pleadings in a proceeding for judicial review of zoning determinations are governed by the rules applicable in civil actions generally.

The rules applicable in civil actions generally govern the propriety and sufficiency of the pleadings in a proceeding for judicial review of a zoning regulation or decision,⁴³ and compliance must be had with all requirements imposed by statute or ordinance.⁴⁴ An objection to the right of a party to maintain a proceeding to review a determination of a zoning body must be made in the manner prescribed by statute.⁴⁵

§ 357. — Petition or Complaint

a. In general

b. In proceedings involving validity of zoning enactment

a. In General

A petition or complaint, in a proceeding to review a determination of a zoning body, must allege sufficient facts to entitle the plaintiff to review, to show the errors complained of, and to entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought.

Generally, where the statutes require a petition or application to institute proceedings for the judicial review of a zoning determination, substantial compliance must be had with respect to the nature of the application which is to be presented.⁴⁶ A petition, complaint, or other application for review or relief must allege sufficient facts to show the error complained of,⁴⁷ and to entitle plaintiff to

(2) In mandamus proceeding by oil company and land owner for permit to construct gasoline station driveway over sidewalk according to plan filed with company's application, granted by zoning board, for modification of zoning regulations, petition merely reciting that company contracted to purchase land and incorporating contract by reference was defective as not showing that company acquired title to, or clear legal interest in, land, as required to entitle it to make such application.

R.I.—Sun Oil Co. v. Macauley, 49 A.2d 917, 72 R.I. 206.

(3) Where officials of municipality petitioned for review of determination by zoning board, failure to allege that action was authorized by petitioners in their official capacity made petition insufficient as matter of law.

N.Y.—Fox v. Adams, 132 N.Y.S.2d 560, 206 Misc. 236.

(4) Petition, in mandamus proceeding which did not allege that plaintiff had filed application for permit and that plaintiff had complied with all applicable laws and regulations other than those which plaintiff sought to have declared invalid did not show that he was injured by the acts complained of;⁵⁰ and his allegations must be sufficient to overcome the presumption of regularity and legality of official action.⁵¹

An allegation of plaintiff's status as a party to an appeal from a decision of a zoning official is sufficient as an allegation that plaintiff was a party of record to the proceedings before the zoning board on such appeal.⁵² It has been held not to be necessary for appellant to incorporate proceedings of the zoning board in his petition.⁵³ A prayer for relief may not be required where the relief which may be granted on an appeal is prescribed by statute;⁵⁴ and where plaintiff appeals from a decision of a board approving the grant of building permits, prayers for a declaratory judgment as to the legality of such action, and for damages, are not appropriate.⁵⁵

The theory of a proceeding is determined from the allegations of the petition and its averments, and not from isolated averments, or isolated acts outside of the petition.⁵⁶

Verification and signing. The failure to verify a petition as required by statute is not a jurisdictional defect where the adverse parties do not act with due diligence to give notice that they elect to treat the petition as a nullity.⁵⁷ Where a statute requires a petition to be verified, but does not require that it be signed, the failure of petitioner to sign it is not jurisdictionally fatal to the appeal.⁵⁸

Amendment of petition. Under statutory authority therefor, an amendment to a petition to review a determination of a zoning body may be allowed in a proper case.⁵⁹ So, where the failure to verify a petition is a nonjurisdictional defect, the court may permit an amendment to the petition to add a verification in the proper form.⁶⁰

Objections to petition or complaint. A petition which is insufficient to state a cause of action may be dismissed on a general demurrer;⁶¹ and a demurrer to the petition may be sustained in part and overruled in part where only part of the petition is insufficient.⁶²

A motion to dismiss a complaint is a proper procedure under some statutory provisions;⁶³ but a bill of complaint, which is sufficient to require an answer, may not be summarily dismissed.⁶⁴ A motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action admits the truth of the facts stated therein,⁶⁵ as well as of every favorable inference which that plaintiff had clear legal right to issuance of permit and petition was premature.

50. R.I.—Petrarca v. Zoning Bd. of Review of City of Warwick, 80 A. 2d 156, 78 R.I. 130.

Sufficiency of allegations

(1) In action to review decision granting variance, allegation that plaintiffs were owners of land in vicinity of property involved was not allegation that they were injured by decision; but it was necessary for them to allege that their property was classified in same district as land in question, but that they were not permitted to enjoy use allowed by variance.

Ill.—Winston v. Zoning Bd. of Appeals of Peoria County, 95 N.E.2d 864, 407 Ill. 588.

(2) Where allegations of complaint to enjoin enforcement of zoning ordinance declaring plaintiff's property adjacent to river to be residential area and prohibiting its use as trailer camp were general in character as to injury to plaintiff because of such designation, and set forth no specific facts from which it might be reasonably inferred that plaintiff would suffer irreparable injury, complaint was demurrable.

Allegations held insufficient

In proceedings to review grant of variance, petitions which did not allege that petitioners were misled by notice of application to establish, operate, and maintain land reclamation project which was in fact a public dump, or allege facts showing they were entitled to notice or allege that petitioners did not attend hearing and participate therein, were insufficient to overcome presumption.

might be drawn therefrom.⁶⁶ Where a zoning commission acted in accordance with the zoning ordinance in issuing a permit, a bill of complaint, seeking to enjoin the erection and operation of a building because the record of the commission's action is insufficient, is properly dismissed.⁶⁷ The dismissal of a petition without affording plaintiff an opportunity to amend is not erroneous where no request to amend is made.⁶⁸

Where a petition is considered to constitute an appeal from a ruling of a board of appeals, rather than an original action, it has been held not subject to a motion that it be made more definite and certain,⁶⁹ such motion has been treated as one to require the filing of assignments of error.⁷⁰ In a proper case, a court may strike immaterial allegations of a petition.⁷¹

b. In Proceedings Involving Validity of Zoning Enactment

It is incumbent on the person making such claim to allege facts to support a claim that a zoning ordinance is invalid, unreasonable, or confiscatory.

It is incumbent on the person seeking relief to allege facts to support a claim that a zoning ordinance is invalid,⁷² unreasonable,⁷³ or confiscatory⁷⁴ in its application to his property, and to state facts sufficient to entitle him to review.⁷⁵ The failure of a complaint to define the amount of property owned by plaintiff has been held not to destroy the efficacy of the complaint or to render it uncertain.⁷⁶

pleading where the original pleading fails to state a cause of action because of a misjoinder of parties plaintiff.⁷⁸

Motion to strike amended petition on the ground of misjoinder of parties defendant is improperly granted where the person joined is a proper party defendant.⁷⁹

Motion to dismiss complaint in federal court will not be allowed on the ground that a state court previously ruled on the questions involved in the complaint.⁸⁰

§ 358. — Answer or Return; Reply

Objections to the merits of a petition may be required to be set forth in an answer, and the return of the zoning board or officer whose decision is under attack should include the decision of the board and a transcript of the proceedings. A reply is improper where not authorized by the statute.

Objections to the merits of a petition may be required to be set forth in an answer and the requisite affidavits, and filed with a certified transcript of the proceeding to be reviewed.⁸¹ However, where defendant, by moving to dismiss the complaint, admits the truth of the allegations of the petition, and, accordingly, no issues of fact remain, a motion for leave to file an answer in the case may be denied.⁸²

Under some statutory provisions, a zoning board or officer whose decision is under attack must file a verified return to the application for review,⁸³ and the return filed should show a legal basis for the decision.⁸⁴ Where respondent gives petitioner due notice of objections to the petition, an answer or return is not required to be filed until the objections have been passed on.⁸⁵ It may be required that the board return to the court on appeal from its decision either the original or certified copy of the petition or application on which the board acted, its minutes of proceedings before it and of its executive action, the transcript of the proceedings if a stenographic record was made, all exhibits considered by it, and a copy of the relevant and material zoning regulations.⁸⁶ However, documents which were not introduced in evidence at any purported hearing before the board have no place in the return.⁸⁷

The failure to verify a return has been held to be an irregularity, rather than an illegality,⁸⁸ and

Amendment held proper

Where civic club appealed from amendment to zoning ordinance and defendant demurred on ground that plaintiff was not a taxpayer or duly constituted voluntary corporation since it had not recorded its articles of agreement with city clerk as required by statute, amendment making forty individual members of club parties plaintiff effective as of date of original petition was allowed even though amendment was retroactive and thirty-day period for appeal had expired.

such defect is waived by the submission of the cause to a court without objection.⁸⁹

§ 359. — Issues, Proof, and Variance

General rules of issues, proof, and variance apply in proceedings for review of determinations of zoning authorities.

The general rules of issues, proof, and variance apply in proceedings for review of determinations of zoning officials or boards.⁹¹ Petitioner must prove the essential allegations of his petition or application for review.⁹² A municipality has been held not estopped to deny the validity of a zoning ordinance on which plaintiff relies, in a proceeding to require the issuance of a permit, where plaintiff does not assert an estoppel in his pleadings or allege facts which constitute an estoppel.⁹³

§ 360. Dismissal

An application to review a determination of a zoning body, or the validity of a zoning enactment, may be dismissed on proper grounds, as where the court lacks jurisdiction of the case, or the application is untimely.

An appeal from a determination of a zoning body, or other proceeding for review, may be dismissed on proper grounds,⁹⁴ such as where the court lacks jurisdiction of the case,⁹⁵ or the questions at issue have become moot;⁹⁶ and where the record that comes to the court fails to disclose any action that would require the court to pass on the zoning ordinance, and there is no judgment, order, or action to be reviewed, the writ will be dismissed.⁹⁷ Under a statute so providing, where no triable issue of fact is raised by an application for review, the proceeding is required to be dismissed;⁹⁸ and dismissal of an appeal from a determination of a zoning body may also be had where appellant fails to prove his case,⁹⁹ or where it is not shown that the decision was arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable.¹

Conclusion of witness

In action for judgment declaring zoning ordinance unconstitutional in so far as it affected plaintiff's individual property which was in a buffer or transitional zone, complaint was required to be dismissed where there was no evidence that property could not yield reasonable return if used for a conforming purpose or of any unsuccessful attempt to find a buyer or tenant for any one of permitted uses and all that plaintiff offered was conclusion of his only witness, unsupported by any facts, that property was useless as presently zoned.

be empowered to dismiss a proceeding to review a determination of a zoning body on the ground of laches in bringing the proceeding;³ but it will be dismissed for laches only if such course will promote substantial justice,⁴ and dismissal on the ground of laches is not warranted where the evidence shows that there was no such undue delay as to constitute laches,⁵ or where none of the parties was prejudiced by the delay.⁶

The fact that a notice to a party to an appeal is faulty has been held not to be a ground for dismissal where a new or alias notice could be granted.⁷ Where a proceeding is brought against several persons, the fact that one of them is not a proper party defendant has been held not to justify dismissal of the proceeding as to all defendants.⁸ An application to review a determination of a zoning body should not be dismissed where the determination was erroneous.⁹

Consideration of affidavits. A court may properly consider affidavits, indicating the necessity for a speedy hearing of the case, on a motion to dismiss for failure of the complaint to state a cause of action.¹⁰

Voluntary dismissal. An order of a trial court, allowing a voluntary dismissal of an appeal from a determination of a zoning commission without giving notice to a party to the cause who had filed an answer and reply, is not erroneous where that party was given a hearing on his motion to set aside the dismissal order.¹¹

§ 361. Evidence

General rules as to the reception of evidence apply in proceedings for the judicial review of zoning matters.

In proceedings for judicial relief with respect to zoning regulations or decisions, the court may be authorized to receive and consider evidence, as discussed supra § 331 b, in which case general rules as to the reception of evidence apply.¹² Where two petitions for a change of zone relating to two separate lots were granted by the zoning authority on the same day, the course pursued by the court in allegedly considering the appeals together, for the purpose of determining the validity of the rezoning, does not constitute reception of other than "legal evidence," although it is the preferable practice for the court to tell counsel in each case of its intention to take judicial notice of the file in the other case.¹³

§ 362. — Presumptions

- a. In general
- b. Acts or decisions of boards or officers

a. In General

All presumptions are indulged in favor of the validity and reasonableness of a zoning ordinance or regulation if it is within the legislative power of the enacting authority.

On judicial review of zoning cases, applicable presumptions will be given effect,¹⁴ but presumptions will not be indulged as to matters not properly the subject thereof.¹⁵ All presumptions must

Inspector as witness

Where city building inspector, who granted building permit to owners for construction of dwelling to be used as a photographic studio as well as dwelling, gave his interpretation of zoning ordinance favorable to owners in hearing before board of appeals of city, and owners made no timely objection when city attorney, who was acting as attorney for those objecting to the granting of the permit, called the building inspector as a witness, the calling of the building inspector as a witness by the city attorney was not reversible error.

Prior ordinance

In action to enjoin enforcement of zoning ordinance restricting a certain area as residential, it would be presumed that no ordinance existed prior to disputed ordinance, in absence of introduction of prior ordinance into evidence.

Similar to statute

Test for determining whether local zoning authority has abused its discretion is similar to that employed in considering constitutionality of a statute, in that it is court's duty to make every presumption and intendment in favor of the validity of the decision and to sustain it unless its invalidity is beyond a reasonable doubt.

Conn.—Eden v. Town Plan and Zoning Commission of Town of Bloomfield, 89 A.2d 746, 139 Conn. 59.

Presumption held not irrebuttable

Mere conflict in testimony as to the highest and best use of property, impact of proposed land use on areas involved or its effect on property values, does not make irrebuttable the presumption that an ordinance is valid, and a difference of opinion does not render the evidence of one party unbelievable, or require a finding that reasonableness of an ordinance is debatable.

Planning

Courts would assume that zoning ordinance was product of far-sighted planning calculated to promote general welfare of city at some future time.

Absence of proof

In determining whether prohibition of lawful use of land by zoning ordinance has real and substantial relationship to public health, safety, morals, or the general welfare, in absence of proof on subject, presumption of existence of such relationship and validity of ordinance is resorted to, but not when there is proof on which a judicial determination thereof can be made, as when the contrary is proved by competent evidence or appears on the face of the enactment.

It is presumed that the legislative body investigated and found conditions such that the legislation which it enacted was appropriate,²⁶ and that it acted wisely²⁷ and with full knowledge of the conditions,²⁸ that it intended a reasonable and legal classification,²⁹ and had sufficient reason to make the classification that it made,³⁰ that it did what was necessary to make the ordinance valid,³¹ and com-

Proper exercise of discretion

City governing body's amendatory ordinance, changing the zoning of certain lands so as to preclude construction of proposed apartment house thereon, was presumably proper exercise of discretion and intended to change zoning districts to conform to comprehensive zoning plan suitable to city.

N.J.—Concord Garden Apartments v. Board of Adjustment of City of Englewood, 64 A.2d 355, 1 N.J.Super. 301.

When presumption disappears

Where facts showed and it was determined by trial court that city acted arbitrarily, unreasonably, and abused its discretion in amending basic zoning ordinance by changing block from single-family residence zone to an apartment house zone, presumption that enactment of amendatory ordinance was valid disappeared.

plied with all requirements as to the formalities of adoption,³² and that the regulation is in the interest of the community as a whole.³³ There is no presumption that in all circumstances no essential official action was taken merely because of the absence of any relative entry thereof in the minutes prepared by the clerk or secretary at the meeting of the zoning body.³⁴

If any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain the ordinance, that state of facts is presumed to exist.³⁵ If necessity under the police power³⁶ or considerations of public health, safety, comfort, or general welfare,³⁷ could have justified the zoning ordinance, the court must assume that they did justify it. It must be presumed that a regulation requiring the location of buildings at specified distances from the street was enacted for statutory police purposes.³⁸ The assumption of validity has been held not to extend, however, to the proscription of churches en masse from residence districts.³⁹ Retroactive operation will not be presumed in the absence of clear and unequivocal language manifesting an intention to give it such operation.⁴⁰

A recital in a zoning ordinance that maps were attached to the ordinance creates a presumption that the maps were attached at the time the ordinance was adopted;⁴¹ and declarations in the ordinance that the provisions thereof constitute the minimum requirements for the promotion of public health, safety, and general welfare of the city are presumed to be correct.⁴² A recital that an amendment is in the general interest is not conclusive in determining whether the amendment is within the police power, but the court must determine for itself

N.J.—Manning v. Borough of Paramus, 118 A.2d 60, 37 N.J.Super. 574.

Official action

Where minutes of meeting of municipal planning board revealed that zoning ordinance was in fact introduced, considered, and finally adopted in an amended form, and the only deficiency in the municipal records was the absence therein of any specific entry relative to official action concerning the amendment, the presumption of occurrence of lawful action by mayor and council prevailed, where evidence was silent in that particular.

Approval of ordinance

Where township submitted zoning ordinance to the coordinating committee and it was not disapproved, approval of the ordinance by the committee must be conclusively presumed.

Interest of community

In acting in a given case, it is always to be presumed, until it appears to the contrary, that a determination of a board of zoning appeals was regularly and honestly rendered in the interest and welfare of the community.

Minutes

On appeal from decision of board of municipal and zoning appeals of municipality approving application to erect an addition to property, reviewing court would assume that board obeyed statutory mandate to keep minutes of its official actions and file them immediately.

Md.—State Housing, Inc. v. City of Baltimore, 137 A.2d 708, 215 Md. 294.

Notice of decision

Appellate court must presume that the planning and zoning commission of a city performed its duty and gave immediate written notice of its decision, adjusting a master zoning plan for unincorporated territory.

ings;⁵² and, accordingly, findings of the board on questions of fact properly before it are deemed to be prima facie lawful and reasonable.⁵³ Members of a zoning board are presumed to have special knowledge in those matters which are a part of their administration of the zoning ordinance;⁵⁴ but it will not be presumed that they acted on special knowledge in the absence of disclosure to that effect.⁵⁵

As to permits and variances. Issuance pursuant to variance

Where no attack was made on validity of action of city building inspector in issuing, pursuant to a variance granted by city planning board, a permit to build a church on premises previously zoned for residential use only, it would be presumed that building inspector acted within his authority and according to rules and regulations of city zoning ordinance.

Ga.—Ledbetter v. Callaway, 87 S.E. 2d 317, 211 Ga. 607.

Denial or revocation

(1) Denial of permit by board of adjustment is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumed right.

Cal.—Cohn v. County Bd. of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County, 286 P.2d 836, 135 C.A.2d 180.

Tex.—Gulf Refining Co. v. City of Dallas, Civ.App., 10 S.W.2d 151, error dismissed.

Accessory use

Where decision of zoning board of appeals granting a church permission to use a portion of its property for off-street parking made no mention of undue hardship to church and its members, court would not assume that permit was granted as a variance from provisions of zoning ordinance, but would assume that such permission was granted under section of the ordinance authorizing granting of a permit for off-street restricted parking as a customarily incidental accessory use.

been held that where a zoning variance was granted after the zoning authority visited the premises and made a personal inspection of existing conditions, the presumption that sufficient reason for the granting of the variance, aside from the record, was revealed by inspection of the locus would not be indulged in by the court.⁵⁸

Decisions with respect to motor vehicle service stations or garages. On review of the decision of a zoning board with respect to the construction and operation of a motor vehicle service station or garage, there is a presumption in favor of the determination of the board.⁵⁹ So on appeal from the action of a board in refusing to grant a certificate of approval for the location of a gasoline station, the court may not assume that the board did not consider and comply with the requirements of statutes as to the conditions necessary for the approval of such location.⁶⁰

§ 363. — Burden of Proof

- a. In general
- b. Acts or decisions of boards or officers

a. In General

Generally, the burden is on the party seeking judicial relief with respect to zoning matters to establish his right to relief; and the one assailing the validity of a zoning ordinance or regulation has the burden of proof to establish that the ordinance is invalid or arbitrary or unreasonable as to his property, that there is no permissible interpretation which justified its adoption, or that it will not promote the safety, order, convenience, prosperity, and general welfare of the public.

As in civil cases generally, the burden is on the party seeking judicial relief with respect to zoning matters to establish his right to relief.⁶¹ The one

R.I.—Roberts v. Zoning Board of Review of City of Pawtucket, 197 A. 461, 60 R.I. 202.

Action under ordinance

Board of zoning appeals, in granting application for extension of building in business zone into adjacent residence zone in accordance with specified paragraphs of city zoning ordinance, must be assumed to have acted under such paragraphs.

Conn.—Bishop v. Board of Zoning Appeals of City of New Haven, 53 A.2d 659, 133 Conn. 614.

Ascertainment of facts

Granting of a variance or exception from zoning ordinance raises presumption that existence of necessary facts to grant such variance or exception has been ascertained and found.

Cal.—Steiger v. Board of Sup'rs of Los Angeles County, 300 P.2d 210, 143 C.A.2d 352—Miller v. Planning Commission of City of Torrance, 292 P.2d 278, 138 C.A.2d 598.

Inspection of premises

In reviewing determination of city board of standards and appeals denying application for variance under zoning regulations, court must presume, in absence of report of inspection of premises and surrounding area and in view of undisputed facts concerning character of surrounding area, that inspection merely disclosed such facts.

N.Y.—Arditi Realty Co. v. Murdock, 67 N.Y.S.2d 809.

Special knowledge

Members of zoning board of review are presumed to have special knowledge of matters involved in determining whether allowance of an exception to zoning ordinance would be in harmony with general purpose and intent of ordinance conferring power to grant exception when board deemed exception to be in harmony with character of the district and appropriate to the uses or buildings in district, but that they acted on such special knowledge will not be presumed on certiorari in absence of disclosure in decision to that effect.

Divided vote

Where permit to construct gasoline station was required to be approved by board of zoning appeals and a concurring vote of four members of the board was necessary to grant permit, and disapproval rested on mere failure to obtain concurring vote of four out of five members of board, the action could not properly be described as that of a fact-finding body, for purpose of deference accorded findings on judicial review.

Md.—Mayor and Council of City of Baltimore v. Bliermann, 50 A.2d 804, 187 Md. 514.

Notice of ordinance

Elements of proof

One assailing validity of zoning ordinance as arbitrary and unreasonable as applied to particular property must prove by clear and affirmative evidence that ordinance constitutes arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable municipal action, that there is no permissible interpretation which jus-

of such ordinance or regulation to his property,⁶⁴ that there is no permissible interpretation which justified its adoption as a reasonable exercise of the police power of the state,⁶⁵ or that the ordinance will not promote the safety, order, convenience, prosperity, and general welfare of the public.⁶⁶

Accordingly, in the absence of proof to the contrary, there is no duty on the municipality to sustain the reasonableness of the ordinance or regulation⁶⁷ or to prove that it is necessary or desirable.⁶⁸ The burden of proof is on the proponent of a change in a zoning ordinance,⁶⁹ and he has the burden of tified its adoption or that it will not promote safety and general welfare of public.

Authorization of variance

Owner of triangular lot in a residential district, attacking validity of zoning ordinance on ground that it was unreasonable, confiscatory, and unconstitutional as applied to his property in that by reason of physical characteristics of such property it could not be used for residential purposes within the limitations imposed by ordinance, had the burden of showing that ordinance did not authorize a variance of general restrictions to permit use of his property for a purpose to which it was reasonably adapted or that such variance had been refused.

proving a public need for the amendment in question.⁷⁰

Nonconforming use. A person who claims the right to use property in violation of a zoning ordinance as a nonconforming use antedating adoption of the ordinance has the burden of establishing such nonconforming use,⁷¹ and that the prior use of the property was legal and not unlawful.⁷² An owner of property denied a certificate for an existing nonconforming use must meet the burden of establishing that the board acted arbitrarily, capriciously, and unreasonably in refusing such certificate.⁷³

b. Acts or Decisions of Boards or Officers

Generally, the petitioner for judicial relief from the acts or decisions of zoning boards or officers has the burden of showing such facts as invalidate the action of the board or officer.

Generally, the burden of showing such facts as invalidate the action of the zoning board or commission is on the petitioner for judicial relief;⁷⁴ but under some statutes, the commission has the burden of establishing the validity of its orders and regulations.⁷⁵ Accordingly, on review of the decision of building and zoning authorities in connection with the construction and operation of motor vehicle service stations and garages, the burden of proof is on the party seeking relief.⁷⁶

As to permits and variances. A person assailing the granting of a permit under the building and zoning laws ordinarily bears the burden of proof to show that the board or official acted improperly in granting the permit.⁷⁷ Likewise, the burden of proving abuse of discretion in denying a permit or revoking one ordinarily is on the applicant.⁷⁸ Where, however, the applicant is entitled to a permit under the ordinance except under specified circumstances, and the board's denial or revocation of the permit is based on such exception, the burden is on the board to establish its applicability.⁷⁹ So, in a mandamus action to compel building authorities to issue a building permit, claims of defendants which were excuses for failure to issue the permits impose the burden of proof on the defendants.⁸⁰

Property owners seeking review by the courts of the decision of a zoning board or officer with respect to the granting or denial of a variance or exception have the burden of establishing that the action of the board or officer was incorrect.⁸¹ So a person seeking reversal of a decision of the board denying a variance has the burden of showing that the applicable provision of the ordinance is not reasonable and justifiable under the police power of the state or that the determination of the board was arbitrary or contrary to law.⁸² Where the ordinance empowered the board to grant variances either where there were practical difficulties or unnecessary hardships or where the effect of application of the ordinance was arbitrary, and plaintiff appealed the board's denial of a variance only on the ground of exceptional difficulty and unusual hardship, the court did not err in holding that

Records

Where records of zoning board of appeals were neither part of the record of zoning commission of city nor found by court to be necessary for equitable disposition of appeal from action of commission in denying application for change of zone, records were not admissible in evidence.

Conn.—Wolfpit-Villa Crest Ass'n v. Zoning Commission of City of Norwalk, 135 A.2d 732, 144 Conn. 560.

Unsworn statement of attorney for property owner urging invalidity of zoning ordinance because of failure to publish use map without which ordinance was meaningless was not evidence, and could not be regarded as evidence as to the alleged defective publication.

Ill.—Rock Island Metal Foundry v. City of Rock Island, 111 N.E.2d 499, 414 Ill. 436.

Depositions

Where village board of adjustment denied petition to use land in village as a noncommercial airport, depositions taken after allowance of writ of certiorari to reverse action of board could not be used to prove that denial was arbitrary.

Celia v. Schaefer, Com.Pl., 43 Del. Co. 23.

Covenants

Where unsuccessful applicant for store building permit was denied zoning variance, because deeds to the property involved contained covenants prohibiting store buildings, fact that there were building restrictions in the deeds of the particular property was irrelevant as to the question before the court of whether a variance should have been granted under the zoning ordinance, since such building restrictions were enforceable only by the grantors of the property, their representatives, heirs and assigns, who were not before the court.

Garage and repair shop

Evidence of other variances granted by zoning board of adjustment in the same and other residential districts had no bearing on legality of certificates of variance for erection and occupancy of garage and repair shop in a residential district and should not have been received in proceeding to review revocation of permits issued pursuant to such certificates, since whether such other variances were properly allowed would necessarily depend on the circumstances in each case.

Md.—Northwest Merchants Terminal v. O'Rourke, 60 A.2d 743, 191 Md. 171.

Waiver of right to hearing

Contention that if village board of appeals were allowed an answer to property owners' petition alleging denial of right to full hearing on zoning matter, board could prove petitioners had waived such right, was negated by documentary evidence and evidentiary facts that petitioners were denied opportunity for full and complete hearing.

Probative value of particular testimony

support the judgment of the court,⁹⁵ and relief will be denied where the evidence is insufficient to warrant it.⁹⁶ The party seeking judicial relief must establish his case by a fair preponderance of the evidence.⁹⁷ Accordingly, where the validity of a zoning ordinance or regulation is challenged, invalidity must be shown by clear and satisfactory evidence,⁹⁸ and unreasonableness must be affirmatively and clearly shown.⁹⁹ Similarly, evidence to justify the court in making a change in the zoning classification should be clear and satisfactory;¹ and the evidence must be clear and convincing to warrant the court in reversing the decision of a zoning board or commission.²

Evidence of what is done by surrounding towns in the field of zoning is not decisive that the imposition of a particular restriction is reasonable and proper,³ but it is persuasive that they have determined that the public interest was best served by the adoption of restrictions identical, or nearly identical, with those under consideration.⁴ Evidence of acts and expenditures in reliance on an invalid zoning law has been held not to tend to show the existence of a nonconforming use of property.⁵ The rule that expert opinions are not conclusive but that their weight is for the consideration of the trier of facts has been applied to opinions as to the benefits of zoning ordinances.⁶

Mere conflict in testimony as to the highest and best use of property, the impact of a proposed use on areas involved, or its effect on property values does not make irrebuttable the presumption that an ordinance is valid, and a difference of opinion does not render the evidence of one party unbelievable, or require a finding that the reasonableness of an ordinance is debatable.⁷

§ 366. Trial or Hearing

On judicial review of zoning regulations or decisions, the parties may be entitled to a hearing or trial on the issues involved, and the court may be required to make findings of fact.

Interested parties may be entitled to a hearing by the court on review of zoning regulations or decisions,²⁷ and the statutory remedy for attacking the validity of a zoning ordinance may entitle the owner to a court trial on questions of fact;²⁸ but where no question of fact is presented to the court, it may dispose of the matter without the necessity of a trial.²⁹ General rules as to trial apply in such proceedings.³⁰ Findings of fact by the court may not be required when the appeal is heard solely on the record before the zoning board;³¹ but the court may be required to make findings where issues of fact are raised by the pleadings,³² and additional evidence is received.³³ Where the court is authorized to receive additional evidence, it may appoint a referee to take such evidence as it may direct.³⁴ Under some statutory provisions, the findings of the court should only contain facts which it finds on the basis of the evidence which it admitted, and not facts which appear in the record of the zoning body.³⁵

Under a statute so providing, the court has power to dispose of the case on a demurrer to the statement of appeal.³⁶ The right of a zoning board to defend an action against it carries with it the right to file a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence.³⁷ A motion to dismiss a case at the close of plaintiff's evidence is improperly granted where plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to withstand the motion.³⁸

The fact that a judge hearing an appeal is related to one of the members of the zoning body from which the appeal is taken has been held not to disqualify him to try the case, where it is essentially a proceeding in rem, with which the relative is not personally concerned.³⁹ Where the prosecutors were allowed a writ to attack the zoning ordinance and to review other proceedings, but the statement of the case does not contain the ordinance and the prosecutors do not argue the invalidity thereof in their brief, the point relating to invalidity is deemed abandoned.⁴⁰ If one of several petitioners dies before argument and the executor of his estate does not wish to be substituted, the proceeding, as far as the deceased petitioner is concerned, will be severed.⁴¹

Jury trial. An application for a jury trial, on review of a determination of a zoning board of appeals, which does not seek a settlement and statement of the issues to be presented to the jury, or present any proposed issues for settlement and statement, is insufficient.⁴² Where the evidence is insufficient to show as a matter of law that the action of a governing body in enacting a zoning ordinance is arbitrary, unreasonable, or capricious, the court may not withdraw the case from the jury.⁴³

Questions of law and fact. Where an attack is made on the validity of a zoning ordinance, in so far as its provisions apply to limit and restrict particular property, it has been said that in each case a mixed question of law and fact is presented.⁴⁴ According to some decisions, it is a question of law for the court to determine whether a particular zoning ordinance is reasonable or arbitrary,⁴⁵ whether the power conferred on a governmental agent of a municipality is arbitrarily exercised,⁴⁶ and whether some of the members of a zoning board were disqualified to rule on the matters before them.⁴⁷

On the other hand, it has been held that the validity of a zoning ordinance presents a question of fact,⁴⁸ and that whether a zoning regulation is reasonable⁴⁹ and conducive to the public welfare and bears a substantial relation to the public health, safety, or general welfare⁵⁰ are also questions of fact. Although there is authority to the effect that the question whether a particular use of property is within the terms of a zoning ordinance permitting such use is one of law,⁵¹ it has also been held that the question whether a particular use is within the terms of an ordinance prohibiting it is one of fact.⁵² Also, the question whether a particular nonconforming use was the same both before and after the passage of a zoning ordinance is a question of fact.⁵³

D. RELIEF GRANTED OR DETERMINATION

§ 367. In General

On review of the determination of a zoning body, the court must act within the bounds of statutory provisions governing the determination and disposition of such causes; the imposition of costs may rest in the discretion of the court.

On review of the determination of a zoning body, generally, the court must act within the bounds of statutory provisions governing the determination and disposition of such causes,⁵⁴ and ordinarily the court is limited to a determination of matters which are within the issues of the case.⁵⁵ Under some statutory provisions, the court has power to reverse or affirm, wholly or partly, or modify the determination of the zoning body,⁵⁶ at least where it has taken and considered additional evidence;⁵⁷ but under other provisions where the court reviewing the proceedings on certiorari disapproves of the decision below, it may not make a further order in the proceedings other than one quashing the decision.⁵⁸

Where the power of the reviewing court is limited to the correction of illegality in the board's decision, although it may not substitute its own discretion for that of the board, it may make such disposition of the case as will correct the illegality.⁵⁹ However, a correction of the determination may not be made where to do so would involve an interference with the exercise of discretion by the zoning body.⁶⁰ Where the court orders a change of a building plan on modification and affirmance of a decision, it is not required to make the actual clerical and professional adjustment of the plan.⁶¹ If the board has adopted a resolution by proper vote but its determination is not shown in the minutes, the court will order the clerical procedure necessary to effectuate the resolution.⁶²

Under some provisions, the court is required to enter such a decree as justice and equity require in accordance with its determination of the law and facts;⁶³ and the decree in a proceeding to review

the action of a zoning board should adequately provide for all the relief to which the successful party is entitled.⁶⁴ However, where there is nothing in the findings of the court to show that the zoning board was under a legal compulsion to grant particular discretionary relief, the court may not enter a decree granting such relief,⁶⁵ or order the board to grant it.⁶⁶ Where the court finds that the action of the zoning board is not erroneous, the decree of the court should not be in the form of a decree of dismissal, but the decree should state that the decision of the board did not exceed its authority and that no modification of it is required.⁶⁷

A ruling dismissing a petition testing the validity of a zoning ordinance has been held to include an implied ruling sustaining the validity of the ordinance.⁶⁸ The court may not, as a condition precedent to any further relief, require an aggrieved party to restore his property to a particular use at once, without the right of appeal from the decision.⁶⁹

Default. Even though a zoning body fails to file an answer, a return, and a certification of the evidence before it, it has been held to be undesirable to permit plaintiff to proceed as on a default where the court is reviewing an action of the body involving the exercise of discretion.⁷⁰

Summary judgment may not be granted where factual questions remain unresolved.⁷¹

Enforcement of judgment. Where attorneys of a municipality were without authority to enter into a consent judgment in a suit involving the application of a zoning ordinance, and the municipality subsequently enacted a new ordinance, the rights of parties bringing a subsequent suit to enforce the prior judgment are governed by the new ordinance.⁷²

Costs and attorney's fees. Under some statutes, the allowance of costs on review of the orders or decisions of a zoning board of appeals may rest in the discretion of the court.⁷³ Costs may be ordered paid by appellant on dismissal of the proceedings for review.⁷⁴ Attorney fees may be allowed, under some statutory provisions, in a taxpayer's suit, as part of plaintiff's costs.⁷⁵

§ 368. Final or Independent Decision

Under some statutory provisions, particularly where the case is heard de novo, a court reviewing a determination of a zoning body is empowered to make a final and independent disposition of the proceeding.

Under some statutory provisions, a court on appeal from a determination of a zoning body is empowered to make a final and independent disposition of the proceeding.⁷⁶ So, under some statutory provisions, where the matter is heard de novo, the court is authorized to make its own rulings on the matter at issue,⁷⁷ or it may render such judgment, and make such orders, as the zoning body should have made.⁷⁸ The court may have authority, in a proper case, to grant a variance.⁷⁹ Where the stat-

Apportionment of costs

In proceeding by corporation to enforce enforcement of zoning resolution, costs should not have been taxed against parties to litigation in their capacity as public officials but should have been limited to judgment for taxation of costs against county, without ordering issuance of execution therefor; however, as case involved a close legal question of vital importance and litigation was in good faith, costs would be apportioned equally between corporation and county.

§ 369. Affirmance

Generally, the court reviewing the determination of a zoning body will affirm or confirm that determination where it is lawful and reasonable.

Generally, the court will affirm or confirm a decision or order of a zoning body where it is lawful and reasonable.⁸¹ On affirmance, the court will not rule on immaterial issues, even though requested to do so by one of the parties.⁸²

§ 370. Reversal

The court may reverse an erroneous determination of a zoning body, as well as a determination which reflects an abuse of discretion, or is arbitrary and capricious.

On review of the determination of a zoning body, the court may reverse the determination where there is error.⁸³ Thus, the court may reverse where the exercise of the discretion of the zoning body is abused,⁸⁴ or is arbitrary and capricious,⁸⁵ or the determination is illegal.⁸⁶

§ 371. Annulment, Vacation, or Setting Aside of Decision or Order

Except as such action may be limited by statute, on review of a determination of a zoning body the court may, in a proper case, annul, vacate, or set aside the determination.

Except as such action may be limited by statute, on review of a decision or order of a zoning body, the court may, in a proper case, annul, vacate, or set aside the determination.⁸⁷ Thus, a decision or order may be annulled or set aside for an error of law,⁸⁸ or for the lack of findings in support of the decision.⁸⁹ The court will also annul or set aside an unreasonable or unlawful decision or order.⁹⁰ Where the action appealed from was beyond the jurisdiction of the board, the court may set it aside despite a change of position and expenditure of money in reliance thereon.⁹¹

However, a determination will not be annulled merely for a failure of the zoning body to keep, and return to a reviewing court, a complete record

§ 372. Remand

On review of the determination of a zoning body, the court may have authority to remand the case for various proceedings by the zoning body, such as a consideration on the merits, a hearing, or the making of findings of fact.

Under some authorities, a court reviewing a decision or order of a zoning body may not remand the case to that body in the absence of statutory authority therefor.⁹⁴ Generally, however, the court may⁹⁵ or must,⁹⁶ in a proper case, remand the matter to the board, with directions, for further proceedings. So, the case may be remanded for the consideration of the issues on the merits,⁹⁷ the holding of a hearing, the taking of testimony, and the making of findings based on the evidence,⁹⁸ the making of a summary of the evidence and the determination of specific relevant facts,⁹⁹ or for the making of detailed findings of fact.¹ The case may also be remanded for the holding of a rehearing prior to a disposition of the case by the court,² or for the clarification and completion of the decision of the zoning body.³

grounds for its decision, but the record shows that the decision was either correct or erroneous, the case will not be remanded.⁶ Under some practice, the court may, in a proper case, sustain the appeal rather than remand the matter to the zoning authority.⁷

Where the court is unable to render a decision on the record which was transmitted to it, but, because of a change in the governing statute, the zoning body which rendered the decision appealed from no longer exists, so that the case cannot be remanded to it, the court will return the record to a successor body without prejudice to petitioner's right to present a petition to that body for such relief as he deems advisable.⁸

§ 373. Effect of Decision

A judgment restraining the enforcement of an invalid zoning ordinance does not prevent the enactment of other zoning ordinances affecting the same property which are reasonable under changed conditions; and reversal of a grant of a variance on the ground of misinterpretation of the ordinance does not prevent the board from granting a variance on proper grounds on a second application.

An injunction restraining the enforcement of an invalid zoning ordinance does not prevent a municipality from enacting other zoning ordinances affecting the same property if conditions so change as to warrant a rezoning that will not be arbitrary and unreasonable.⁹ A decree enjoining a municipality from interfering with the construction of a particular type of building notwithstanding the terms of a zoning ordinance does not prevent the application of the ordinance to the property in question so as to allow construction which violates the ordinance in other respects.¹⁰

A variance granted by a zoning board remains in full force and effect when it is affirmed by a reviewing court.¹¹ Reversal of a grant of a variance on the ground that the board has misinterpreted the ordinance does not prevent the board from granting a variance on proper grounds on a second application.¹² Similarly, where a structure is erected pending an appeal from the decision granting a variance for its use contrary to a zoning ordinance, on reversal of the decision granting the variance, the structure, although it may not be put to the prohibited use, may be put to any permissible use under the zoning regulations and need not be removed.¹³

Where a permit issued by a zoning board, building permits, and certificates of occupancy under which a business is constructed and operated are annulled by a court order, the law of the case has been held to be that all activities involved in the construction and operation of the business had at all times been illegal.¹⁴ Where plans for a house, which did not conform to a zoning ordinance, are revised to conform to it, such defect in the original plans is cured by a decree approving the revised plans.¹⁵

Res judicata. A prior decision sustaining the validity of a zoning regulation does not preclude a landowner from showing that the regulation cannot be lawfully applied to a specific parcel of land in the peculiar circumstances connected with that parcel.¹⁶ A finding, in a prior action between neighboring property owners and a zoning board in which a particular landowner assisted in the defense but exercised no control over the conduct of the suit, is not res judicata as to the landowner in a subsequent suit involving the same issue.¹⁷ A decree which is not binding on a party because it is based on a stipulation that a zoning ordinance is illegal is not res judicata in a subsequent suit to enforce it.¹⁸

§ 374. Further Proceedings by Zoning Body

On remand of a case to a zoning body, it is incumbent on that body to execute the judgment embodied in the mandate of the court.

When a case is remanded to a zoning board by a reviewing court it is incumbent on the board to execute the judgment embodied in the mandate of the court,¹⁹ and where there is nothing in the opinion or mandate of the court which narrows the jurisdiction of the board, it may open the case for the taking of further proof.²⁰ Where an order of a court, on a motion to correct and amend a resolution of a zoning board, grants the motion and remits the matter to the board without any limiting language, the board is not required to hold a hearing de novo on the merits.²¹

Generally, further proceedings before a zoning board on remand require that proper notice and an opportunity to be heard be given to the parties,²² and, where the case assumes its original status before the board, so that the party who instituted the proceedings is reestablished as applicant, any burden imposed by statute as to notice of the hearing on remand is on such party.²³

E. SUBSEQUENT REVIEW

§ 375. In General

A review of a judgment or order of a court which reviewed an order or decision of a zoning body may be had in a proper case.

Under some statutes an appeal may be taken in a proper case from the decision of a court reviewing a decision of an administrative body with respect to zoning.²⁴ Although an appeal may lie from the issuance of a writ of certiorari by a court acting in its original common-law capacity,²⁵ in the absence of a statute authorizing it, there is no right of further review of a decision or order of a court on review, under statutory authority, of a decision or order of a zoning body unless the court acted without jurisdiction, or exceeded its statutory authority.²⁶

Writ of error coram nobis is not available to correct errors of law in the lower court.²⁷

§ 376. Jurisdiction

Constitutional and statutory provisions may limit the particular courts which may assume jurisdiction of an appeal from a decision of a lower court on review of a determination of a zoning body.

Jurisdiction of appeals from determinations of a court on review of a decision or order of a zoning body is controlled by constitutional and statutory provisions, and only appellate courts authorized by such provisions may exercise jurisdiction.²⁸

Transfer of cause. Under a statute so providing, where a case is not properly before a particular court on review of a determination of an inferior

Procedure held proper

Where court entered mandate setting aside resolution of board granting variance because of absence of finding of unnecessary hardship, and remitted matter for further action, board could properly adopt corrective resolution granting variance and stating existence of hardship as basis therefor after first voting against variance on an improper interpretation of mandate.

Constitutional questions

(1) Where no question of constitutionality of zoning ordinance is involved, intermediate appellate court is not deprived of jurisdiction of appeal on ground that it has no jurisdiction to try constitutional questions.

Mo.—Bormann v. City of Richmond Heights, App. 213 S.W.2d 249.

(2) Where issue of constitutionality of zoning ordinance was presented to, and decided by, trial court, invalidity of ordinance was primary object of suit, and direct appeal to supreme court from judgment of unconstitutionality was authorized, although trial court judgment was possible only because court first decided that suit was not barred by res judicata, and this was only question on appeal.

Ill.—Whitsel v. Cook County, 122 N.E.2d 564, 4 Ill.2d 269.

(3) Where contention that ordinances under which board of zoning appeals was operating were void, on ground that they offended constitutional provisions, was not properly raised for decision on writ of error, supreme court had no jurisdiction on ground that question of constitutional law was involved.

court, it must be transferred to an intermediate appellate court.²⁹ Where the sole question on appeal is the construction of a zoning ordinance, and there is no showing that the loss to the property owner will exceed the monetary jurisdiction of the court if the ordinance is construed contrary to his views, the cause will not be transferred to another court.³⁰

§ 377. Decisions Reviewable

In general, the judgment or order of the court below, on review of a determination of a zoning body, must be final in order to be reviewable.

As in civil actions generally, except as may otherwise be provided by statute, the decision of the lower court on review of the determination of a zoning body must be final to be appealable.³¹ An order denying a motion for reargument of a petition for certiorari has been held not appealable,³² and an order of a lower court remitting the proceeding to the zoning board for further consideration and determination has likewise been held not appealable.³³ An appeal may not be had from a decision of a court which is declared by the governing statute to be conclusive.³⁴

§ 378. Who May Appeal

Generally, persons aggrieved by a decision of a court on review of a determination of a zoning authority may appeal therefrom.

In accordance with general rules, persons who are properly parties to the proceedings for review of orders or decisions of a zoning official or board usually may appeal from the determination therein.³⁵ Parties who are aggrieved by the decision of the court below may seek a review of, or may appeal from, the adverse decision;³⁶ but a corporation is not an aggrieved or interested party entitled to appeal merely because its members are aggrieved or interested persons.³⁷

Under some statutes, which do not by their terms confer a right of appeal, zoning officials may not appeal from decisions of a court reversing or overruling their orders or decisions.³⁸ Under other statutes, where a zoning agency is a party to the review proceedings, it may appeal from an adverse decision therein,³⁹ especially where it represents the public interest.⁴⁰ According to some authority, a municipal corporation may prosecute an appeal from the decision of a court reviewing the decision of an administrative body with respect to the granting, denial, or revocation of a permit.⁴¹ On the other hand, a municipality, which was not a party to the record before a board of appeals or adjustment, may not prosecute a writ of error in its own name from a decision on review of the determination of the board, even though it was an intervenor in the review proceedings,⁴² although it may, through its attorneys, seek review of the decision of the court in the name of its employee on whom the decision acts directly.⁴³

§ 379. Presentation and Reservation Below of Grounds for Review

Except for Jurisdictional matters, questions which were not raised in the court below on review of a determination of a zoning authority will not be considered on further review.

Generally, questions or objections which were not raised or urged in the original proceedings for review of a decision or order of a zoning official or board will not be considered on further review.⁴⁴ Accordingly, constitutional questions not properly raised below will not be considered on the appeal.⁴⁵ It has been held, however, that objections to the jurisdiction of the lower court to review the action of the zoning board may be raised for the first time in the higher appellate court.⁴⁶

§ 380. Stay of Proceedings

A stay of proceedings on further review of a determination of a zoning board may not be had if irreparable damage would result if it were granted.

In the case of an appeal by a zoning board from a determination upsetting its order, an application by the board for a stay of the determination will be denied if the adversary may suffer irreparable loss from a stay, while the board will suffer no material or substantial injury from a denial of a stay.⁴⁷ An order of a lower court, vacating a stay pending appeal from a judgment setting aside a zoning ordinance, is intended to be effective at once, even though it is not signed by the court, where it accompanies a simultaneous dismissal of defendant's cross appeal to which the stay was incident, and it is announced in open court in the presence of counsel for the parties.⁴⁸

§ 381. Taking and Perfecting Proceedings for Review

The time for taking and perfecting an appeal from a judgment on review of a determination of a zoning body may be governed by statutory provisions.

The time for an appeal from a judgment or appealable order of a court on review of a determination of a zoning body may be governed by statutory provisions.⁴⁹

Appeal bond. Under a statute permitting a board of adjustment to appeal from adverse decisions on review of its orders, the board is considered to be a governmental agency exempted from the requirement of filing an appeal bond.⁵⁰

Briefs. Matters which were not before a zoning board or the trial court have been held to be improperly included in an appendix to a brief filed on appeal from a review of a determination of such board.⁵¹

§ 382. Record

The record on appeal from a decision of a trial court on review of the determination of a zoning body may and should contain such matters as are essential to a proper consideration of the questions raised for review.

On appeal from a decision of a trial court reviewing the action of a board of appeal or adjustment, the usual rules of appeal and error govern the requirements as to the record.⁵² Thus, the

§ 383. Dismissal

An appeal from a decision on review of an order of a zoning body is subject to dismissal for various reasons, including lack of jurisdiction on the part of the appellate court, and the fact that the questions involved have become moot.

An appeal from a decision on review of an order of a zoning body will be dismissed for proper cause,⁵⁶ as where the appeal was not taken within the required time,⁵⁷ or where there has been a failure to comply with court rules governing appellate procedure.⁵⁸ An appeal will also be dismissed where appellant fails to show that he is a party authorized, under the governing statute, to appeal,⁵⁹ or where the questions involved therein have become moot;⁶⁰ but a dismissal of a case as moot may be made without prejudice to the future litigation of any question that was decided by the lower court.⁶¹

Costs. Under some statutes costs on dismissal of a case on further review must be paid by appellant.⁶²

§ 384. Scope and Extent of Review

On appeal from a decision on review of a zoning matter, an appellate court will consider only matters which form the basis of the decision appealed from, and unless the decision is palpably wrong, it will not be disturbed.

The scope and extent of inquiry on subsequent review of zoning cases is governed by the usual rules applicable to such matters in civil cases.⁶³ Usually, the appellate court will not consider, or make a ruling on, matters other than those forming the basis of the decision appealed from,⁶⁴ and it will decline to rule on an issue in the appeal where the person who will be affected by its determination is not a party to the appeal.⁶⁵ So, if

Broad or narrow certiorari

(1) According to some decisions, scope of review is as on broad certiorari.

(2) Where statute did not provide for appeal from lower court on zoning questions, review was as on broadest certiorari, and this would be so whether or not testimony on issue had been taken below, scope of inquiry of court being determined by breadth of certiorari issued by it and not by power exercised by court below.

(3) It has been held, however, that on property owner's appeal from dismissal of complaint questioning validity of zoning ordinance amendment, superior court would have to consider case as on narrow certiorari. Pa.—Appeal of Lieb, 116 A.2d 860, 179 Pa. Super. 318.

there has been no manifest abuse of discretion on the part of the lower court.⁷⁵ Where the legality of a zoning ordinance or resolution is the subject of the review proceedings, the court will consider only the questions of jurisdiction and the regularity of the proceedings,⁷⁶ and the court will not consider the merits of the controversy.⁷⁷

Under a statute requiring the trial court to try zoning appeals de novo, where the trial court relies on the findings and the order of the zoning commission, instead of following the statutory requirements, and the entire record is before the appellate court, it will consider the case as though the trial court had decided it independently.⁷⁸ In such event, a court rule as to the credence to be given findings of fact by a trial court has been held not to be fully applicable.⁷⁹ Undisputed evidence which was erroneously excluded by the lower court may be considered on further review.⁸⁰ On the other hand, where the lower court is not authorized to consider additional evidence in reviewing a decision of a zoning agency, on review, the appellate court will eliminate such additional evidence from consideration in determining whether the order of the agency is supported by competent and substantial evidence.⁸¹

A provision of the decree of the court below which is improper will be treated as surplusage on appeal.⁸² Where the courts lack authority to rezone property after holding a zoning ordinance void, the appellate court will interpret an ambiguous decree below as leaving the way open for the zoning authorities themselves to do the rezoning.⁸³ Where a case was not properly before the zoning board of appeals, the appellate court, on review of the decision of the trial court reviewing the board's action, may not consider the merits of the case.⁸⁴

Judicial notice. An appellate court may take judicial notice of a zoning ordinance and its amendments,⁸⁵ and of the fact that members of a zoning body are familiar with local conditions.⁸⁶

Questions of law. On review of a decision of a lower court on a zoning matter, an appellate court may consider questions of law.⁸⁷ Where the trial court, on hearing an appeal from action of the zoning board, took additional testimony, the test used by an appellate court is not whether the board committed an error of law, but whether the trial court did so.⁸⁸ It has been held that the basic question on review of a dismissal of a proceeding by the lower court is whether that court erred as a matter of law in dismissing the case.⁸⁹ Where the appellate court affirms the judgment appealed from on the merits, it will not rule on procedural questions which do not affect the merits.⁹⁰

Moot questions. On further review, the appellate court will not consider questions which have become moot.⁹¹

§ 385. — Presumptions

Presumptions in favor of the correctness of the ruling of a trial court on review of a determination of a zoning body will be indulged on further review.

An appellate court, on appeal from a decision of a lower court reviewing a decision or order of a zoning official or board, will indulge all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the decision appealed from,⁹² and the presumption in favor of the correctness of the determination by the board, when affirmed by the lower court, should be given great weight on further review in an appellate court.⁹³ Where a zoning board of appeals is not required to hear evidence on the questions before it, the court on appeal may not assume that it acted illegally, arbitrarily, and capriciously in not holding a formal hearing before making its determination.⁹⁴

§ 386. — Matters of Discretion

On further review the appellate court ordinarily does not review or interfere with the exercise of discretion by the court below or by the zoning body whose determination is being reviewed.

As a general rule, the exercise of discretion by a court on review of a zoning determination will not be disturbed on a subsequent review of the decision of such court.⁹⁵ However, the appellate court will examine the record to determine whether there was a manifest abuse of discretion by the court below,⁹⁶ regardless of whether or not the court below heard additional testimony;⁹⁷ and the action of that court may be set aside for such abuse of discretion.⁹⁸ Likewise, except for a clear abuse of discretion,⁹⁹

the exercise of discretion by a zoning official or board will not be reviewed or disturbed on subsequent review,¹ especially where it has been upheld by the lower court.² The appellate court has been held limited to determination of the question whether the zoning board was guilty of a manifest and flagrant abuse of discretion.³

In any event, the appellate court may not substitute its discretion for that of the zoning board where the governing ordinance declares the decision of the board involving the exercise of discretion to be final.⁴

§ 387. — Questions of Fact; Findings

On appeal from the decision of a lower court reviewing a zoning determination, the appellate court will not try the case de novo or make independent findings, and it will examine the fact findings of the trial court only to determine whether they are supported by sufficient or substantial evidence.

On appeal from the decision of a lower court reviewing the determination of a zoning body, the appellate court as a general rule will not try the case de novo or make independent findings.⁵ So, the court of higher review does not consider the

Superior position of trial court

In proceeding to determine constitutionality of zoning ordinance, wherein testimony was conflicting, and credibility accorded to witnesses, as well as weight of their opinions concerning values of property affected by ordinance, may have been determining factors in decision of trial court, position of trier of facts was superior to that of reviewing court. Requested finding held not justified by record

On appeal seeking to review action of town plan commission in changing zoning regulations so as to permit erection of incinerator on a certain site and in suit for injunction, finding that erection of incinerator would take property without due process of law and without compensation was not justified, under record showing that resulting damage would be such as is not considered a taking of property for which compensation must be made.

be disturbed unless they are inconsistent with each other.¹¹

Under some authorities, on appeal from a trial de novo in the court below on review of a determination of a zoning body, all questions of fact are open for review,¹² and the appellate court may make independent findings of fact,¹³ although the findings of the trial judge will not be disturbed unless plainly wrong.¹⁴ In at least one jurisdiction, the appellate court disregards the evidence offered in the trial court, and bases its decision on the record before it and the findings of fact made by the zoning board.¹⁵ On appeal from a judgment declaring certain provisions of a zoning ordinance invalid, findings and conclusions of the trial court as to reasonableness are not binding on the appellate court if the record shows that the question is debatable, but the appellate court may look beyond such determinations and consider the basic physical facts appearing in the record to determine whether the question of reasonableness is fairly debatable.¹⁶

On appeal from the action of a zoning board which has been affirmed by the court below, the appellate court will review the circumstances of the case,¹⁷ and the action of the board will be sustained in the absence of an affirmative showing that it was unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious.¹⁸ The appellate court may be bound by the order of the zoning board which was appealed from where it is supported by material evidence.¹⁹ So, where findings of a zoning board amount to a judgment of a legislative department, the appellate court may not interfere with them unless they are manifestly against the weight of the evidence.²⁰ Where the determination of the board is supported by competent evidence, the appellate court will not reverse that determination because of an error in the admission of evidence by the board.²¹ In determining whether there is sufficient evidence to support the findings or order of the zoning body, the evidence presented in the court below is to be construed most favorably to uphold the ruling of the board.²²

§ 388. — Harmless or Prejudicial Error

On further review of determinations of zoning bodies, errors which are harmless or not prejudicial will not justify disturbance of the decision of the trial court.

As in other civil cases, on further review of proceedings before zoning officials or boards errors which are harmless or not prejudicial will not justify disturbance of the decision of the lower court.²³ An erroneous conclusion of the court below is harmless where there are other valid grounds to support its judgment.²⁴ Prejudicial error, however, is ground for reversal.²⁵

§ 389. Determination and Disposition

On appeal from a decision of a lower court reviewing a determination of a zoning body, an appellate court may affirm or reverse the decision, or remand the case to the lower court with directions, or for further proceedings; in a proper case, costs may be awarded to the prevailing party.

A judgment or decree of a lower court, on review of a determination of a zoning official or board, which is correct, will be affirmed on further review.²⁶ However, the decision of the lower court

X. ENFORCEMENT OF ZONING REGULATIONS; OFFENSES AND PENALTIES

A. IN GENERAL

§ 390. General Principles

A municipality may, and is under a duty to, institute any appropriate action to enforce zoning regulations and prevent violations thereof; and it is not estopped by failure to enforce the regulations in the past. A property owner may, in certain circumstances, have the right to take steps to enforce a zoning regulation.

In general, under zoning statutes, a municipality is authorized to institute any appropriate action to enforce zoning regulations and prevent violations thereof,⁴³ generally by a suit for injunction, as discussed infra § 394, or by actions and prosecutions for fines or other penalties for such violations, as discussed infra § 417. Indeed, it is the duty of the municipality or the proper officials to enforce its zoning regulations,⁴⁴ and proceedings in the nature of mandamus may be brought to compel the performance of this duty, as discussed infra § 391.

Estoppel to enforce ordinance. A municipality cannot be estopped to enforce a zoning regulation against a violator by the conduct of its officials in encouraging or permitting such violator or others to violate the ordinance in the past,⁴⁵ since in the enforcement of a zoning ordinance, bylaw, regulation, or restriction a municipality or other governmental subdivision acts in its governmental capacity as distinguished from its proprietary capacity, so that the doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied against it.⁴⁶

The effect on the validity of zoning laws of a failure to enforce them is discussed supra § 44.

Right of property owners to enforce regulations. While the rights of a property owner may, in certain circumstances, include the right to take steps to enforce a zoning regulation,⁴⁷ this right is not a private right, but exists only by virtue of statute;⁴⁸ and the zoning laws do not permit a proprietor who is not protected in his own zone to appropriate to himself the protection accorded to others in a more protected zone.⁴⁹

Review of zoning orders enjoining violations. Rules governing proceedings for judicial review of administrative proceedings generally have been applied to proceedings for the judicial review of orders of zoning authorities purporting to enjoin a violation of a zoning regulation.⁵⁰

§ 391. Proceedings to Compel Enforcement; Mandamus

The duty of a municipality and its officials to enforce its zoning regulations may, in a proper case, be enforced by a proceeding in the nature of mandamus or by other remedies provided by statute.

The duty of a municipality and its officials to enforce its zoning regulations, discussed supra § 390, may, in a proper case, be enforced by a proceeding in the nature of mandamus against the officials,⁵¹ or by other remedies, where provided by statute.⁵²

Mandamus will lie where the applicant is aggrieved by the failure to enforce the law;⁵³ but it has been held that officials may not be compelled to enforce a penalty provision of a zoning ordinance in the absence of a statute imposing a duty of enforcement and liability for failure to enforce,⁵⁴ especially where a permit was granted at a time when the ordinance was not in force.⁵⁵ Where in the exercise of quasi-judicial or discretionary power officials permit a nonconforming or accessory use, the decision may not be reversed in a proceeding seeking mandamus to compel enforcement of the zoning law,⁵⁶ unless an abuse of discretion is shown.⁵⁷

It has been held that mandamus will not issue to compel officials to stop construction undertaken under a permit issued by them.⁵⁸

Existence of other remedies on right to mandamus. The existence of statutory remedies to review actions of zoning authorities and for enforcement of zoning laws and regulations by proceedings by taxpayers against violators of zoning laws when officials fail to act has been held not to prevent the maintenance of mandamus to compel officials to seek the removal of violations of a zoning ordinance;⁵⁹ but it has been held that mandamus does not lie to compel municipal authorities to enforce a zoning ordinance where the applicant has an adequate remedy by injunction against the persons alleged to be violating the ordinance,⁶⁰ or by an administrative appeal from the refusal of an official to enforce the ordinance.⁶¹

Procedure in mandamus proceedings. Rules governing proceedings in mandamus generally, discussed in Mandamus §§ 240-381, have, where appropriate, been applied in mandamus proceedings to compel the enforcement of zoning regulations.⁶² A statute providing that a proceeding which affects

Absence of appealable "order or decision"

Where only building permit was issued by board of selectmen before office of building inspector was created and before he assumed office, and only act which building inspector performed after passage of zoning amendment reclassifying land was removal of stop order which had theretofore restrained construction work on the land, there was no "order or decision" from which aggrieved landowners could appeal, and it was therefore their right to bring petition for writ of mandamus requiring board of appeals and building inspector to enforce zoning bylaw as it stood before amendment.

62. N.Y.—In re Dunphy, 133 N.Y.S. 2d 561.

Burden of proof

Applicant for mandamus has burden of demonstrating necessity and propriety of its use.

N.Y.—In re Dunphy, supra.

the title to real property shall not have any effect except against the parties thereto and persons having actual notice thereof until a memorandum is recorded does not apply to a proceeding for mandamus to compel enforcement of a zoning law.⁶³

Judgment. The judgment granting mandamus and commanding the public officials to enforce the provisions of the zoning ordinance must be directed to the issue on which the case was tried,⁶⁴ and must be sufficiently specific to put an end to the violative use.⁶⁵ The judgment should not be too broad,⁶⁶ and it need not pass on, or spell out, permissible uses which appear never to have been exercised and may never be exercised.⁶⁷

Review. On review of a proceeding in mandamus to compel a public official to enforce a zoning regulation, the reviewing court is guided by principles applicable on review generally.⁶⁸ On an appeal by some parties from an order directing a town board and others to remove certain alleged variances and violations of zoning ordinances, the order, in so far as the board is affected, will not be disturbed, where the board did not join in the appeal.⁶⁹

§ 392. — Joinder of Zoning Violator

The property owner violating the zoning regulation may be joined as a party in the mandamus proceeding to compel enforcement, and where so joined he is bound by the judgment, and may be subject to contempt for failure to obey it.

In a proper case the property owner violating the zoning regulation may be joined as a party in the mandamus proceeding to compel enforcement, as the real party respondent;⁷⁰ and, where he is so joined, he will be bound by the judgment and may be subject to contempt for failure to obey it.⁷¹

It is no defense to the proceeding to adjudge the respondent in contempt that the zoning body had granted a "variance" extending the time within which he must comply with the mandamus judgment,⁷² since the zoning authorities cannot determine, in the guise of an exercise of the power to grant a variance, when defendant should comply with the judgment requiring compliance with the zoning ordinance.⁷³

§ 393. Declaratory Relief

In some jurisdictions a violation of a zoning ordinance may be remediable by way of an action for declaratory relief.

In some jurisdictions a violation of a zoning ordinance may be remediable by way of an action for declaratory relief,⁷⁴ notwithstanding other remedies therefor are available,⁷⁵ at least where the statute provides that the remedy provided by way of declaratory relief is cumulative.⁷⁶

Under such statutes, a zoning ordinance or regulation providing a remedy for its violation does not provide an exclusive remedy, so as to preclude the bringing of an action for declaratory relief;⁷⁷ nor is resort to an action for a declaratory judgment improper on the ground that plaintiff should have resorted to mandamus to compel the enforcement of the ordinance by the proper authorities.⁷⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that a declaratory judgment will not be granted delineating the extent of operation which will be permitted on the part of defendant under a zoning ordinance.⁷⁹

In any event, before a court may deny declaratory relief on the ground that other remedies exist, it

Findings

Finding of trial court, in action to compel public buildings commissioner to enforce zoning ordinance, that use of property in violation of zoning ordinance was not a nonconforming use which antedated adoption of ordinance was not plainly wrong, and would be upheld on appeal.

Determination

Where trial court had granted petition for writ of mandamus against inspector of buildings to compel him to remove alleged zoning violations but action of trial court was overturned by reviewing court because mandamus would not lie, reviewing court would express no opinion as to accuracy of inspector's determination.

B. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST VIOLATIONS

§ 394. In General

The violation of zoning regulations may in a proper case be enjoined, particularly under statutes or constitutional provisions to that effect.

The violation of zoning regulations may in a proper case be enjoined,⁸¹ even though an injunction is not specifically permitted or authorized by the ordinance.⁸² Certainly, the violation of a zoning regulation may be enjoined under various statutes which confer on municipalities power to enact zoning ordinances or bylaws and also authorize an injunction to restrain violations of such ordinances or bylaws;⁸³ and, under a constitutional provision authorizing municipalities to enforce police, sanitary, and other regulations, a municipality may maintain a suit for an injunction to prevent or restrain the violation of a zoning ordinance.⁸⁴

On the other hand, an injunction will be denied where facts justifying the issuance of an injunction do not appear;⁸⁵ and the legality of the zon-

Purpose of statute

Statute empowering local governing board to prevent unlawful structures in violation of zoning statute or ordinance and to correct or abate such violation is intended to render the injunctive process available to the local authority for the enforcement of a statutory zoning policy and local regulations made under the statute, and not to punish criminal offenses as such, and the process of injunction is invoked in aid of the zoning power and not to enforce the law's penalties for a crime.

N.J.—Mayor & Council of Brewster, 80 A.2d 297, 7 N.J. 42.

No private right

A town seeking an injunction to prevent violation of its zoning bylaw is not asserting any private right but is merely seeking compliance with its local regulations adopted in furtherance of public interest.

ing law must be established before a violation thereof will be enjoined.⁸⁶ Thus, an injunction will be denied where it appears that the statute authorizing the suit for injunction is inapplicable,⁸⁷ or the zoning ordinance is unreasonable⁸⁸ or was not duly adopted in conformity with the provisions of the governing statute.⁸⁹

In determining whether an injunction should issue against violations or threatened violations of zoning laws, the facts to be considered are the facts existing at the time of the final hearing.⁹⁰

Discretion of court. As a general rule, the granting or refusal of an injunction to restrain the violation of a zoning regulation is a matter for the discretion of the court;⁹¹ but it has been held that the court may not refuse an injunction where there has been established a violation of the zoning ordinance, the legality of which has not been attacked.⁹²

Nature and form of proceedings. An action to enjoin the occupation or use of a building in violation of a zoning ordinance, to direct the removal of the business, and to restrain its alleged unlawful manner of operation, is an action in equity for an injunction, and not an action at law for a nuisance,⁹³ and should be placed on the appropriate calendar.⁹⁴

Jurisdiction. Zoning authorities do not have jurisdiction to enjoin property owners from violating zoning laws, that prerogative belonging to the courts.⁹⁵ Moreover, the action must be brought in the court having the jurisdiction of the cause.⁹⁶

Service of process. In the case of an action against a nonresident owner of property and his tenants to enjoin a use of the property which is in violation of the zoning regulations, service of proc-

Under statutes authorizing a city to maintain action to enjoin construction of a building in violation of any city ordinance, county court had jurisdiction of action by city to enjoin construction of a building allegedly in violation of zoning ordinance prohibiting erection of more than one main building on a single lot and defining an accessory building as one subordinate to the main building and used for a purpose incidental to permitted use of main building.

ess on the tenants may be sufficient to sustain the action.⁹⁷

§ 395. Availability of Other Remedies

An Injunction against a zoning violation will ordinarily be granted when, and only when, there is no other adequate remedy.

An injunction against a violation of a zoning ordinance will ordinarily be granted where there is no other adequate remedy for enforcement of the regulation.⁹⁸ On the other hand, there is generally no right to an injunction if there is another adequate remedy available,⁹⁹ although it has been held that an action to enjoin a county from erecting buildings in violation of a zoning ordinance is not improper merely because other remedies might have been available to plaintiffs.¹

§ 396. — Criminal Prosecutions

The fact that a zoning violation is also a penal offense does not ordinarily preclude an injunction, since the criminal penalty is generally not considered as an adequate remedy.

The fact that the violation of a zoning law is, at the same time, a violation of a criminal or penal provision of a statute or ordinance does not ordinarily take away the authority of a court of civil jurisdiction to prevent or terminate the violation,² or preclude the obtaining of an injunction against such violation,³ since the criminal penalty is generally not considered an adequate remedy.⁴ Under this view, where a zoning ordinance provides that a violation shall constitute a criminal offense, two courses are open to the municipality, which are not mutually antagonistic; a prosecution may lie for the violation, and an injunction may issue to prevent further violations.⁵ The fact that criminal proceedings were pending against the city officials does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to enjoin the violation of a zoning ordinance.⁶

On the other hand, it has been held by some authorities that equity will not interfere by injunction to restrain the violation of a zoning law, which violation is made a penal offense, punishable by fine,⁷ at least where such violation does not threaten injury to the property of a person in the vicinity;⁸ and this is true regardless of whether the injunction is sought by a private party or the municipality or governmental entity.⁹ Where the remedy by prosecution for violations of a zoning law or ordinance is adequate, it has been held that a violation will not be restrained.¹⁰

In any event, where the statute or ordinance contains no provision for a penalty for a violation thereof, injunction is a proper remedy to prevent substantial public injury.¹¹

97. Tenants as "principal defendants"

In suit to restrain tenants and non-resident owner from use of premises for multiple dwelling purposes contrary to zoning ordinance and written agreement, tenants were "principal defendants" within statute providing for service on nonresidents when court has acquired jurisdiction of subject matter in controversy by service of process on one or more of the principal defendants, so as to justify service of process on such nonresident owner particularly, in view of fact that proceeding to enforce a zoning regulation is directed primarily against the land itself and the use thereof and only incidentally against the owner.

§ 397. Particular Subjects of Injunctive Relief

Injunction has been held to lie to restrain the construction of a structure or the use of premises in violation of a zoning ordinance, and to enjoin various other zoning violations such as violations of permit restrictions, violations by a tenant, and extensions of nonconforming uses; but various uses and structures have been held not subject to restraint by injunction.

In accordance with the general rules, discussed supra §§ 394-396, an injunction has been held to be the proper remedy to restrain the construction of a structure,¹² or the use of a building or property,¹³ in violation of a zoning ordinance. Thus, an injunction has been held to lie to enjoin, in residential zones, commercial uses,¹⁴ an undertaking business,¹⁵ a business involving the use and movement of commercial vehicles¹⁶ or trailers and tractors,¹⁷ and the use of a residence in a family residence zone for the housing of the members of a cooperative association.¹⁸

On the other hand, various uses and structures have, under the particular circumstances, been held not subject to restraint by injunction,¹⁹ such as the construction of multiple dwellings,²⁰ and the use of premises for a public service or governmental purposes.²¹ It has been held that a use of property which is not in violation of the zoning ordinance cannot be enjoined merely because it substantially depreciates the value of nearby property.²²

Violations of permit restrictions. An injunction may be granted where a property owner, to whom a permit has been issued, fails to use the premises in accordance with restrictions contained in the permit,²³ as where the permit limits the use to certain hours of the day.²⁴

Where city planning commission had tentatively recommended that parcel be zoned for single residence purposes only, but petition had been filed with council requesting that area be differently zoned in order that it might be used as site for orphans' home, and council, giving favorable consideration to petition, had given area a classification permitting nine separate and distinct uses, including use as site for multiple dwellings and also as site for orphans' home, subsequent grantees would not be enjoined from constructing multiple dwellings on parcel.

Nonconforming uses; extensions and replacements. In the case of property subject to a nonconforming use, an injunction may be granted against the violation of a zoning ordinance by the extension of such use.²⁸ So also, where buildings are used in a business constituting a nonconforming use, in a zone in which such business would otherwise be prohibited, the court may properly enjoin the replacement of destroyed buildings in so far as the new buildings may involve a size or use other than that previously existing.²⁹ On the other hand, a use or construction in connection with a nonconforming use will not be enjoined where such use or construction is not regarded as constituting an enlargement or extension of the nonconforming use,³⁰ or is not such an enlargement or extension as will violate the zoning regulation.³¹

25. Ga.—Best v. Truitt, 92 S.E.2d 5, 212 Ga. 296.

Failure to begin construction within six months

Where applicant for building permit did not comply with ordinance requiring construction of property in compliance with a permit lawfully issued, to have been begun within six months from the effective date of the amendment, in that the permit was issued on the last day of the six months period and no actual construction was begun thereunder until later, the applicant was properly enjoined from erection of the building on the premises involved. Ga.—Best v. Truitt, supra.

Late application for new permit after suspension of work

Where permit for construction of filling station provided for expiration if work was suspended for sixty days, but building code provided that permittee could apply for new permit to recommence work if period of suspension had not exceeded one year, permittee who had suspended construction for more than sixty days and who had not made timely application for new permit lost whatever rights he had to compel issuance of new permit because of work and labor extended in reliance on original permit, and would be enjoined from continuing construction or obtaining a new permit because of change in zoning law making filling station a nonconforming use. Utah.—Judkins v. Fronk, 234 P.2d 849, 120 Utah 359.

26. Food supply business

Where tenants presumably with knowledge and consent of landlord used premises in residential districts as food supply depot, and carried on business therein involving cooking of meats, washing, packaging, and processing of vegetables and other food products for sale at stores remote from the premises and also carried on manufacture, painting and repair of equipment for the stores, use could be enjoined by public building commissioner even if use was no more detrimental to neighborhood than former permissible nonconforming use as a dairy farm.

28. Storage of objects without power of locomotion

Where lot in residence zone was subject to nonconforming use for storage of poles, cables, and pipe, storage of trailers and other objects without power of locomotion was not sufficiently different to authorize issuance of an injunction against violation of zoning ordinance, but storage of motor vehicles, such as a freight truck or a bus, was sufficiently different to warrant such an injunction.

29. Petroleum business

Where buildings of company conducting business of buying and selling various petroleum products as a nonconforming use in a zone in which its business would otherwise be prohibited were destroyed by fire, trial court properly enjoined reconstruction of any of the buildings other than of the size and use of those buildings which existed on premises when zoning ordinance was enacted, in absence of zoning permit from bureau of engineering, surveys and zoning in accordance with zoning ordinance.

Pa.—Humphreys v. Stuart Realty Corp., 73 A.2d 407, 364 Pa. 616.

30. Fire protection

Building of water tank for defendant's plant was not an extension of a nonconforming use under which defendant was permitted to engage in certain light industrial work, and hence borough was not entitled to injunction restraining the use of the tank, where the sole purpose of tank was to provide adequate fire protection.

Changes within purview of discussion

Fact that repairs to building were more extensive than contemplated did not entitle city to an injunction on ground of an enlargement of a prior nonconforming use, where changes were within purview of initial discussion between building inspector and property owner and inspections were made by city in the course of the work.

nuisance,³² or such use or structure is, by statute, regarded as a nuisance per se;³³ and it has been held that threatened violation of a zoning ordinance will not be enjoined, even at the suit of the municipality, unless the violation to be restrained will constitute a nuisance.³⁴

Where a particular use, such as a garage or filling station, is not excluded from an area by the zoning regulations, and a permit therefor is granted, whether such use may nevertheless be enjoined on the ground that, because of the particular nature of the use and the proximity to a residential zone, it will constitute a nuisance is governed by principles relating to the granting of injunctions for nuisances generally.³⁵ Thus, where its construction is not a violation per se, and whether it will eventually constitute a violation or a nuisance depends on the manner in which it is used, the question of violation or nuisance is speculative, and does not warrant the intervention by a court of equity by way of injunction.³⁶

§ 399. Defenses

Matters which are germane to the cause of action for the injunction and present a legal reason why the plaintiff should not succeed therein may constitute good defenses.

In accordance with general rules, matters which are germane to the cause of action for the injunction and present a legal reason why plaintiff should not succeed therein may constitute good defenses,³⁷ except where circumstances are such that defendant is precluded from asserting the defense by waiver or estoppel.³⁸ The invalidity of the zoning ordinance violated may be a valid defense;³⁹ and the fact that the zoning authority had reclassified the

32. Stores

In action by city against property owner in which it was contended that zoning ordinance was violated by creation of noise and confusion and by disturbing peace of neighbors through operation of stores in single-family residence district, evidence required conclusion that use of two lots by defendant was within ordinance providing that nonconforming use shall not be continued if by reason of noise or otherwise it shall become a nuisance to residents. Defenses held unavailable by agreement

Defendant, who had acknowledged zoning provisions limiting density of population, had entered into an agreement to comply with such ordinance at termination of war emergency situation, and had acted thereon to his benefit, could not subsequently repudiate his agreement and avail himself of defenses of laches, estoppel, and one-year statute of limitations in action to enjoin violation of zoning provisions.

Colo.—Di Salle v. Giggall, 261 P.2d 499, 128 Colo. 275.

Matters held not defenses

38. Tex.—Newton v. Town of Highland Park, Civ.App., 282 S.W.2d 266, error refused no reversible error.

Facts held to constitute waiver or estoppel

(1) Where, for twenty-one years, the public acquiesced in and permitted enforcement of city zoning ordinance without objection, and city had granted more than four hundred building permits, and, in reliance on validity of ordinance, there had been changes in conditions involving extensive property interests, property owner was estopped to contend that ordinance was ineffective because of alleged failure to comply strictly with statute requiring publication of ordinance after its adoption.

Iowa.—City of Creston v. Center Milk Products Co., 51 N.W.2d 463.

(2) Where property owner applies for building permit for erection of business building in district in which business uses are prohibited by zoning ordinance, and property owner does not appeal ruling denying permit to board of adjustment but secures permit to erect residential building, property owner waives right to assert as defense in action to enjoin him from using the property for a prohibited use, that he is entitled to use new building for business purposes because of some prior nonconforming use, and successor in title to property owner is in no better position to assert such defense.

Wis.—Jefferson County v. Timmel, 51 N.W.2d 518, 261 Wis. 39.

(3) Defendant, proceeding on theory that village zoning ordinance, which he was charged with violating, was valid, but inapplicable to him, and not attempting to attack its constitutionality until he filed motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial six days after rendition of judgment against him, waived right to question validity of ordinance.

Ill.—Village of Riverside v. Kuhne, 73 N.E.2d 286, 397 Ill. 108, transferred, see, 82 N.E.2d 500, 335 Ill. App. 547.

property so as to make the use or construction proper may also constitute a valid defense.⁴⁰

Failure of defendant to appeal or seek relief. The failure of a lot owner to apply to the board of adjustment for relief against restrictions placed on his property by a zoning ordinance does not preclude him from asserting matters of defense available to him, in the municipality's action against him to enjoin the violation of the ordinance;⁴¹ and he may raise the defense that the ordinance was unreasonable and discriminatory against him.⁴² Where, prior to the expiration of a reasonable time for appeal by a property owner from an order prohibiting further alteration of the premises by such owner, the municipality instituted a suit to enjoin the use of the property in violation of the zoning regulations, the failure of the property owner to take an appeal from the order does not preclude him from asserting defenses and litigating issues involved in the municipality's suit.⁴³

§ 400. — Determination in Criminal Proceeding

The determination in a criminal proceeding involving a zoning violation is not res judicata in a civil proceeding for an injunction.

The determination in a criminal proceeding involving a zoning violation is not res judicata in a civil proceeding for an injunction,⁴⁴ even where the charge in both proceedings is the same.⁴⁵ Thus, the fact that a criminal prosecution fails does not mean that an injunction in the civil courts may not be applied for, even where the criminal charge is based on the same alleged violation as is the petition for injunction.⁴⁶

The operation and effect generally of a judgment in an action for penalties for violation of a zoning ordinance or regulation are discussed infra § 421.

§ 401. — Estoppel or Laches

A municipality is not ordinarily barred by estoppel from maintaining an action to enjoin a zoning violation, although an individual may be barred by estoppel or laches; and it is no defense that there has been no enforcement of the ordinance in the past or that others may also be violating the ordinance.

Since, in enforcing zoning regulations, a municipality acts as a governmental agency, and exercises the police power of the state,⁴⁷ it is not ordinarily precluded from maintaining an action to enjoin a violation or threatened violation of the zoning law by estoppel,⁴⁸ at least where some of the essential elements of estoppel are lacking.⁴⁹ Ac-

40. No authority to reclassify

Where the zoning board did not have authority to reclassify the property, as claimed in the defense, the fact that plan for rezoning residential area to commercial area could be perfected in future was immaterial in determining whether or not the use of a building constructed in violation of present zoning law could be enjoined.

Facts held not to create estoppel

(1) Delay of over three years in bringing suit to enjoin use of property in violation of zoning law did not estop city to maintain the suit.

R.I.—City of Warwick v. Campbell, 107 A.2d 334, 82 R.I. 300.

(2) Town was not estopped to enforce a zoning ordinance against the use of plaintiff's property as a cemetery and crematory where substantially all the improvements of the land made in 1938 had gone to waste, and the expenditures made by the present developers had been made when they had notice that the adoption of a zoning ordinance prohibiting the use of the property as a cemetery and crematory was pending.

Conn.—Fairlawns Cemetery Ass'n v. Zoning Commission of Town of Bethel, 86 A.2d 74, 138 Conn. 434.

No estoppel as to adjoining properties

Where zoning commission issued permit to allow corporation to rebuild destroyed factory, which was a nonconforming industrial use contrary to zoning ordinance, zoning commission was not estopped to enjoin corporation from using parcels of realty which adjoined original factory, for parking area in violation of zoning ordinance, since permit only allowed reconstruction of factory on lots where it stood, and corporation had aggravated its problem by enlarging factory.

Ohio.—Gwynn v. Trimedge, Inc., 109 N.E.2d 1, 158 Ohio St. 307.

49. N.J.—Borough of Rockleigh, Bergen County v. Astral Industries, Inc., 102 A.2d 84, 29 N.J.Super. 154.

Opposition by municipality known; permit unauthorized

In view of fact that company, cordingly, the fact that the officials of a municipality had encouraged or permitted defendants to violate the zoning regulation in times past does not estop the municipality to obtain an injunction against further violation;⁵⁰ and, where defendant knew that his use of property was unlawful and in violation of zoning regulations, the municipality may enforce the law and, despite its inactivity and failure to object, is not chargeable with laches and is not estopped.⁵¹ On the other hand, the right of an individual to maintain an action to enjoin the violation of a zoning regulation may be lost, where the requisite elements are present, by estoppel⁵² or laches.⁵³

In general, the fact that there had been, in the past, no enforcement of the zoning ordinance, and no steps taken to prevent violations thereof, is no defense to an action to enjoin such violation.⁵⁴ Thus, the fact that others may also be violating a zoning ordinance in the same manner as defendant is no defense to an action to enjoin the violation;⁵⁵ and the fact that defendant himself had been using the property in the same way is similarly no defense.⁵⁶ The holder of a building permit who commenced construction and incurred liabilities before the adoption of the zoning ordinance will not be restrained.⁵⁷

The fact that plaintiff had himself formerly violated the regulation does not preclude him from obtaining injunctive relief.⁵⁸ which was operating manufacturing business pursuant to nonconforming use authorizing light industrial work, knew of opposition by municipality to extension of water mains, and in view of fact that building inspector had no authority to sanction enlargement of nonconforming use by issuing permit for construction of water tank and water mains to be used in fire protection system, municipality was not, because of such permit, estopped to obtain injunction to restrain such enlargement, even though the fire protection system had been substantially completed at great expense.

§ 402. Parties

All who must be bound by the injunction to make it finally effective are proper parties to be joined, and the municipality and nearby property owners may be proper parties; but persons having no legal interest in the action may not be joined.

The general rules governing proper and necessary parties in civil actions apply in actions for an injunction for violations, or threatened violations, of zoning regulations.⁵⁹ Thus, all who must be bound by the injunction to make it finally effective and so avoid the recurrence of litigation on the same subject matter are proper parties to be joined;⁶⁰ and under this rule tenants of the property in issue may be properly joined as parties defendant.⁶¹

The zoning board or commission and the municipality or governmental entity are primarily interested in the enforcement of the zoning regulations, and hence are the real parties in interest to an action to enjoin their violation;⁶² and both the individuals affected and the municipality may be parties plaintiff.⁶³ Adjoining or nearby property owners or owners of property within the zoning use district may be proper parties in an action to enjoin the violation of a zoning ordinance.⁶⁴ However, persons having no legal interest in the subject matter of the action may not be joined as parties.⁶⁵

An injunction proceeding may properly name as a party, and the person to be enjoined, the general manager of a business rather than the owner, where the owner is a nonresident.⁶⁶

§ 403. — Who May or Must Sue

An action to enjoin the violation of a zoning ordinance ordinarily may or must be instituted by the municipality or in its name.

In general an action to enjoin the violation of a zoning ordinance may be instituted by the municipality,⁶⁷ or in its name,⁶⁸ by the proper, authorized officials.⁶⁹

While the right of a private individual to maintain an action to enjoin a zoning violation has been recognized in some jurisdictions under certain circumstances, as discussed infra § 404, it has also been held that such an action must be brought by the public authorities,⁷⁰ and must be in the name of the municipality as the real party,⁷¹ and cannot be maintained simply as a taxpayers' suit.⁷²

§ 404. — Private Individuals; Property Owners

An action to enjoin the violation of a zoning ordinance may be maintained by a private individual, such as a nearby property owner, if the use or structure constitutes a nuisance, or if the individual has suffered or is threatened with special damages.

In accordance with the general rule that, where the injury complained of is in fact a public injury, and the right violated is a public right, an individual cannot maintain a suit for an injunction unless he suffers a special injury different from that suffered by the public at large, discussed in Injunctions § 22 b, a private individual, such as a nearby property owner, nance, fact that plaintiff had a public garage on his premises previous to enactment of zoning ordinance did not prevent plaintiff from obtaining injunctive relief.

owners without reference to a showing of special injury.⁸⁴

While depreciation of property values has been held to constitute special damage as a basis for enjoining the violation of a zoning ordinance,⁸⁵ a showing of depreciation of value is not essential to maintenance of the action since it is not the only special damage which a property owner may suffer;⁸⁶ and the interest of a property owner in the continuation and observance of the zoning classification or restriction may be sufficient to entitle him to the equitable remedy of injunction.⁸⁷ It has been held, however, that diminution of property value is not enough, of itself, to authorize injunctive relief.⁸⁸

A provision of an ordinance to the effect that owners of property within a specified distance of a proposed conditional use shall be notified thereof does not prevent the owners of property located more than such distance from the premises to be so used from maintaining an action to enjoin the use as a violation of the zoning ordinance.⁸⁹

§ 406. Pleadings

The complaint or petition must state a cause of action for the injunctive relief sought and must properly plead the ordinance violated; and the defendant's pleading must contain matters of defense. Determinable issues are those presented by the pleadings.

The general rules governing questions as to pleadings in injunction proceedings apply in proceedings to enjoin the violation of a zoning regulation.⁹⁵ Accordingly, the complaint or petition must allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action for the injunctive relief sought.⁹⁶ Thus, plaintiff's pleading must allege sufficient facts as to the violation of the ordinance,⁹⁷ and the ordinance must be properly pleaded⁹⁸ or sufficiently identified,⁹⁹ although the ordinance need not be set out in hæc verba in the bill of complaint.¹ The municipality is not required affirmatively to aver or show that the ordinance included the whole municipality in a comprehensive zoning plan even though a zoning ordinance which is not so applicable is invalid.² Erroneous reference to the authorizing statute will not render a pleading insufficient where it is clear from other parts of the record which statute was intended.³

Where plaintiff in the injunction suit discovers new matter after the filing of the original bill a supplemental bill setting it out may be filed on motion.⁴

Special damage or injury. In an action by a city, governmental entity, or zoning authority to restrain the violation of a zoning ordinance, no special damage or injury to the city or public need be alleged,⁵ nance, defendant's operations could be enjoined as violative of law, even though the business was not so conducted as to constitute a private nuisance as to the individual plaintiffs and without regard to whether or not the individual plaintiffs would be entitled to enforce zoning law. Pa.—Molner v. George B. Henne & Co., 105 A.2d 325, 377 Pa. 571.

95. Md.—Kahl v. Consolidated Gas Elec. Light & Power Co. of Baltimore, 57 A.2d 331, 189 Md. 655.

Decision on demurrer reserved

In suits to restrain power company from constructing an overhead transmission line without having first obtained a special zoning permit, chancellor did not abuse discretion in reserving decision on complainants' demurrers to answers until after a hearing on the merits. Md.—Kahl v. Consolidated Gas Elec. Light & Power Co. of Baltimore, supra.

Demurrer held not sustainable

Where property owners sought to restrain adjacent property owner from constructing garages on property in area allegedly restrictively zoned, demurrer, on ground that property owners had adequate remedy of law under ordinance without provisions of ordinance having been proved, could not be sustained. Mass.—Boyle v. Building Inspector of Malden, 99 N.E.2d 925, 327 Mass. 564.

Prayer for general relief

Prayer for general relief is sufficient to warrant any decree supported by facts alleged in the complaint if those facts are proved by evidence.

Ill.—Du Page County v. Henderson, 83 N.E.2d 720, 402 Ill. 179.

Ill.—Du Page County v. Henderson, 83 N.E.2d 720, 402 Ill. 179.

(2) In action in equity for injunction restraining violations of a zoning ordinance, where complaint alleged both personal injury from noxious odors and property damage from trespass, motion to dismiss the complaint on ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action would be denied.

N.Y.—Barnum v. Rome, 61 N.Y.S.2d 426, affirmed 61 N.Y.S.2d 519, 270 App.Div. 853.

Ga.—Lanier v. Richmond County, 45 S.E.2d 415, 203 Ga. 39.

Amendment held good

In action to enjoin defendant from operating a lumber manufacturing plant in violation of zoning laws and ordinances, second count added to petition by amendment, alleging in more detail contention that permit for business, under circumstances it was issued to defendant, did not authorize defendant to operate lumber manufacturing plant using machines, and amplifying details and circumstances of transaction declared on, was sufficient to satisfy rule of enough to amend by, and was good against general demurrer.

Ga.—Reed v. White, 63 S.E.2d 597, 207 Ga. 623.

Pa.—Byers v. Conner, Com.Pl., 2 Lebanon 276—Moyerman v. Glanzberg, Com.Pl., 73 Montg.Co. 212.

Conjunctive statement

Allegations in several paragraphs, conjunctively stated, that together showed a violation of the ordinance were sufficient.

Ala.—Bobo v. City of Florence, 69 So.2d 463, 260 Ala. 239.

98. Cal.—Taliaferro v. Wampler, 273 P.2d 829, 127 C.A.2d 306.

Title and day of passage

If plaintiff asserting violation of city ordinance by defendant elects not to allege adoption and effect of ordinance in detail he must allege its title and day of its passage.

Cal.—Taliaferro v. Wampler, supra.

Complaint held insufficient

Where complaint seeking permanent injunction to restrain defendants from continuance of alleged violation of building zone ordinance failed either to allege at large the portion of ordinance which had been violated or state substance thereof in sufficient detail to identify it and to show primary fact that defendant's continuance of airfield was a violation of the ordinance, complaint was insufficient to state cause of action.

although there is some authority to the contrary;⁶ but in an action by a private individual, such as a property owner, special damage must be alleged in some jurisdictions,⁷ although not in others.⁸

Defendant's pleadings. Matters of defense must be contained and sufficiently set forth in defendant's pleading.⁹ Defendant may plead as many separate defenses as he has;¹⁰ and he can plead a denial of a violation of the ordinance and also plead the invalidity of the ordinance.¹¹

Issues, proof and variance. In accordance with rules governing such matters in proceedings for injunctions generally, discussed in Injunctions § 188, the issues properly determinable by the court are those presented by the pleadings,¹² and issues which are outside the scope of the case as presented by the pleadings are not before the court for determination.¹³ The proof must correspond with the pleadings and relate to the issues.¹⁴

§ 407. Evidence

The general rules of evidence apply in actions for an injunction against the violation of a zoning ordinance or regulation.

The general rules governing questions relating to evidence in civil actions have been applied in actions for an injunction against the violation of a zoning ordinance or regulation.¹⁵ Thus, the general rule that any otherwise competent evidence which is relevant and material is admissible and that evidence which is irrelevant, immaterial, or directed to collateral issues will be excluded, has been applied in such proceedings.¹⁶

Action by building inspector

N.Y.—Griffin v. Reville, 149 N.Y.S. 2d 312, 1 Misc.2d 1045.

6. Petition held insufficient

Petition which failed to show how or in what manner the operation of a second filling station on premises would damage those members of the public who came within sphere of its operation and which did not show that the public might sustain some degree of inconvenience or annoyance or that the gasoline tanks were calculated to produce a dangerous situation did not state a cause of action authorizing the solicitor general to proceed as for the abatement of a public nuisance.

7. Md.—Weinberg v. Kracke, 55 A.2d 797, 189 Md. 275.

Pleading held sufficient

In suit in equity by owners of realty in area zoned as residential district for mandatory injunction requiring owner of store, which could be used under zoning ordinance as a store because such use existed at time ordinance became effective, to remove improvements made in violation of ordinance, averments of bill that property of owners of realty and owner of store adjoined were sufficient, in absence of demurrer, to allege facts showing that owners of realty sustained special damage, so as to entitle them to maintain the suit.

Ala.—Moore v. Pettus, 71 So.2d 814, 260 Ala. 616.

Allegation held insufficient

Property owner's allegation that use by defendants of property for purpose of automobile wrecking yard and for storage and sale of motor vehicles prohibited by ordinance would seriously endanger health, safety, morals, and general welfare of owners did not allege any damage to owners differing from that of general public so as to entitle owners to an injunction on proof of allegation.

Defense set up by amendment

In suit for injunctive relief against erection of filling station in violation of zoning ordinance, defendant could amend original answer to set up defense that county zoning authorities had, since suit was filed, rezoned the area so as to permit erection and operation of filling stations therein.

Remedy not sought by pleadings

Injunction against nuisance, even though nuisance was established by evidence, would not be granted in an action where sole remedy sought was for an injunction against a violation of zoning ordinance.

N.Y.—President and Trustees of Village of Ossining v. Meredith, supra.

Contention as to one not party to suit

In action to enjoin use of building constructed in violation of zoning ordinance, contention of defendants that building could be used as a church could not be considered since no one having authority to represent a church was made a party to the action.

La.—City of New Orleans v. Leeco, 53 So.2d 490, 219 La. 550.

Issues raised by general denial

In suit to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance, where complaint alleged that nonconforming use commenced after restrictions became effective, general denial put in issue question of prior existence of nonconforming use, and, therefore, it was error to exclude evidence offered by defendant as to when its use was established.

§ 408. — Presumptions and Burden of Proof

The court will indulge in the usual presumptions in an action for an injunction against a zoning violation; and the plaintiff has the burden of proving his cause of action and the defendant must prove his defenses.

In accordance with rules governing presumptions and burden of proof in civil actions generally, presumptions obtaining in civil proceedings generally, such as presumptions of regularity of governmental proceedings, arise in actions for an injunction against the violation of a zoning regulation;¹⁷ plaintiff has the burden of proving the facts constituting his cause of action for an injunction¹⁸ and defendant must prove all the defenses on which he relies which are not admitted.¹⁹ When plaintiff has met the burden of proof and made out a prima facie case, the burden of going forward with the evidence shifts to defendant.²⁰ al court properly took testimony to determine whether enforcement of restriction would be of value to plaintiffs.

Mich.—Smith v. First United Presbyterian Church, 52 N.W.2d 568, 333 Mich. 1.

(3) Ordinance, in ordinance book, held admissible.

Ala.—Walls v. City of Guntersville, 45 So.2d 468, 253 Ala. 480.

(1) In general.

Cal.—Diederichsen v. Sutch, 118 P.2d 863, 47 C.A.2d 646.

Mass.—Town of Lexington v. Bean, 172 N.E. 867, 272 Mass. 547.

(2) In suit to enjoin use of structure as apartment house in zoned dwelling house district, testimony of witness as to other persons in same general area renting rooms to lodgers was properly excluded as irrelevant to issue as to whether defendants were operating their building as apartment house.

Ga.—White v. Griggs, 80 S.E.2d 163, 210 Ga. 364.

(3) In proceeding to enjoin use of residential property for automobile repair garage in violation of zoning ordinance, testimony that property owners in vicinity of alleged violation did not object to such use of property was immaterial and irrelevant to any issue involved on hearing and did not tend in any way to show that zoning ordinance was invalid or that defendant was not violating the same.

Tex.—City of Waco v. Marstaller, Civ.App., 271 S.W.2d 722.

17. Ala.—Walls v. City of Guntersville, 45 So.2d 468, 253 Ala. 480.

Where town officials acquiesced in completed accessory building with respect to alterations made eighteen years previously without a building permit, and alterations caused building to violate zoning ordinance, in action to enforce zoning ordinance, presumption would obtain that after such lapse of time extension was consistent with the ordinance, and not that there was a violation, and alteration would be construed as extension of a use to building which was designed for such nonconforming use at time ordinance was passed.

Tex.—Town of Highland Park v. Marshall, Civ.App., 235 S.W.2d 658, error refused no reversible error.

18. Idaho.—Boise City v. Better Homes, 243 P.2d 303, 72 Idaho 441.

Violation

(1) Plaintiff has the burden of proving the violation or impending violation of a zoning ordinance or regulation.

Tenn.—Red Acres Imp. Club v. Burkhalter, 241 S.W.2d 921.

(2) Plaintiff municipality has burden of establishing the ordinance that was violated.

Ala.—Walls v. City of Guntersville, 45 So.2d 468, 253 Ala. 480.

Nonexistence of nonconforming use

In suit to enjoin violation of ordinance, burden would be on city to show not only that zone restrictions were in effect in area including defendant's property, but that nonconforming use complained of did not exist at time such restrictions became effective.

Idaho.—Boise City v. Better Homes, 243 P.2d 303, 72 Idaho 441.

19. Idaho.—City of Idaho Falls v.

Validity of ordinance or regulation violated. In general, where the zoning ordinance or regulation allegedly violated is not invalid on its face it is presumed, or is prima facie held, to be valid,²¹ and the burden of proving its invalidity and the facts showing its invalidity is on defendant, the party making such claim,²² and not on plaintiff municipality or adjoining landowner.²³

Special damage. A municipality or zoning authority bringing suit for injunction for violation of its zoning regulations is not required to show special damage;²⁴ but in some jurisdictions a private person is not entitled to recover where he has not shown that he would suffer any special damage or injury by reason of the violation,²⁵ although the rule may be otherwise under some circumstances in other jurisdictions.²⁶

Exception in ordinance

It is incumbent on defendant to prove that he is within an exception in the ordinance.

Idaho.—City of Idaho Falls v. Grimmett, 117 P.2d 461, 63 Idaho 90.

Estoppel to enforce ordinance

In action by owner and occupant of private residential property to enjoin as a nuisance the maintenance of garage built by adjoining landowner in violation of zoning ordinance, defendant had burden of proving the facts of the estoppel which he had pleaded as a defense.

of the parties and the burden of proof may be reversed where the injunction against violations of a zoning ordinance is sought in a cross action.²⁷ Hence, in such circumstances, the burden of proving the invalidity of the zoning ordinance allegedly violated is on plaintiff.²⁸

§ 409. — Weight and Sufficiency

General rules apply in determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence in proceedings to enjoin violations or threatened violations of zoning ordinances or regulations.

Rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally have been applied in proceedings to enjoin violations or threatened violations of zoning ordinances or regulations.²⁹ Thus, in various cases, evidence has been held sufficient to warrant the issuance of an injunction or to establish incidental facts necessary to its issuance,³⁰ or sufficient to warrant the refusal of an injunction or insufficient to warrant its issuance or to establish incidental facts necessary to its issuance.³¹

More specifically, the sufficiency of the evidence has been determined with respect to proof of the violation of a zoning ordinance,³² the validity of 27. Tex.—Edge v. City of Bellaire, Civ.App., 200 S.W.2d 224, error refused.

28. Invalidity not shown

Plaintiff seeking to enjoin interference with operation of restaurant in residential zone failed to show that ordinance zoning for residential purposes property which had for several years been used only for such purpose was unreasonable, discriminatory, or arbitrary, and hence court properly enjoined use of the property in violation of zoning ordinance, notwithstanding jury's finding that inclusion of property in residential zone was unreasonable and arbitrary.

Tex.—Edge v. City of Bellaire, supra.

29. Mich.—Rockenbach v. Apostle, 47 N.W.2d 636, 330 Mich. 338.

Weight of conclusion of city engineer

In action to enjoin construction of a house in violation of city zoning ordinance requiring that residences be set back from property line a sufficient distance to conform to general pattern of setback of existing residences on any street, court was not bound by conclusion of city engineer, in whose office ordinance was prepared, that it would not be violated by construction of proposed house, where engineer's testimony disclosed that his conclusion was based on fact that side of building on corner lot facing intersecting street was scarcely ten feet from property line on street in question without regard to fact that all other houses in block were set much farther back from street.

La.—Rabalais v. Hillary Builders, App., 62 So.2d 846.

Proof of ordinance violated

In suit by city to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance, burden of proving the ordinance was discharged by introduction of ordinance book containing the zoning ordinance with statutory certificate under hand of city clerk with respect to adoption, publication, and existence of the ordinance.

Ala.—Walls v. City of Guntersville, 45 So.2d 468, 253 Ala. 480.

Grant of exception

In suit to enjoin defendants' use of premises as a parking lot, evidence sustained finding of trial court that zoning board of appeals, under all circumstances, was justified in granting exception to defendants to use three lots as a nonprofit, customer, or employee parking lot.

Ohio.—Steisapir v. Sears Roebuck & Co., App., 112 N.E.2d 548.

Purpose of violation

In action by tenant to enjoin continued commercial use of building in violation of zoning law, evidence was sufficient to establish that acts of landlords and curtailment of various services previously rendered tenants were designed to make continued presence of residential tenants enjoying protection of the statutory rent laws so untenable as to force their eviction in order to make possible introduction of new commercial tenants at vastly increased rents.

§ 410. Trial

General rules govern matters as to trial in actions to enjoin violations or threatened violations of zoning regulations, such as questions of law and fact, the submission of questions to the jury, and findings.

Rules governing matters relating to trial and trial procedure in civil actions generally have been applied in actions for injunctions to restrain violations or threatened violations of zoning regulations,³⁹ as with respect to questions of law and fact,⁴⁰ the submission of questions to the jury,⁴¹ and the necessity and sufficiency of findings.⁴²

38. Evidence held insufficient

In action by town to enforce zoning bylaw forbidding use of certain realty for industry, trade, manufacturing or commercial purposes but not preventing continued use of any realty for purpose for which it was used at time bylaw was adopted, evidence by defendants in support of claim for damages on ground that one to whom they had contracted to sell gravel held them responsible in damages for breach of contract was insufficient to prove any damages. Mass.—Town of Wayland v. Lee, 91 N.E.2d 835, 325 Mass. 637.

39. Ind.—Tomlinson v. Marion County Plan Commission, 122 N.E.2d 852, 234 Ind. 88.

40. Question held one of fact

Filling station is not a nuisance per se, and whether a particular station, when put in operation, will be so situated as to constitute a nuisance is a question of fact.

Ark.—Phillips v. Adams, 309 S.W.2d 205.

41. Evidence held to warrant submission of case to jury

In action by city to enjoin construction of a building allegedly in violation of zoning ordinance, evidence that defendants proposed to erect a building to be used as a garage, office, and warehouse from which to conduct a vending machine business on the same lot as a building used by defendants' tenants for conducting a variety store and for dwelling purposes made out a submissible case on question of violation of zoning ordinance prohibiting erection of more than one main building on a single lot and defining an accessory building as one subordinate to main building and used for a purpose incidental to permitted use of main building.

42. Tex.—Edge v. City of Bellaire, Civ.App., 200 S.W.2d 224, error reversed.

Tex.—Edge v. City of Bellaire, Civ.App., 200 S.W.2d 224, refused no reversible error.

Findings held not erroneous or unwarranted

Tenn.—Pointer v. Davis, 241 S.W.2d 1000, 193 Tenn. 41.

Special finding not required

Where trial court made special finding not required by statute and not requested by parties, it was considered general finding.

Ind.—Tomlinson v. Marion County Plan Commission, 122 N.E.2d 852, 234 Ind. 88.

43. Cal.—People v. Johnson, 277 P.2d 45, 129 C.A.2d 1.

Default judgment and proceedings thereafter

Where city sued to enjoin violation of zoning ordinances, defendant's motion to amend petition by showing provisions of involved ordinances was overruled and defendant was given ten days to plead further, defendant did not comply with order and on following day filed motion to require plaintiff to separately state and number causes of action, and approximately six months later plaintiff moved for default judgment, trial court under record properly granted plaintiff's motion and refused to permit defendant to plead further on ground that defendant merely meant to delay final judgment and to protract litigation unnecessarily.

Summary judgment; triable issue

Where defendant in action by town to enjoin him from making alterations or additions to building in a residential zone attacked validity of zoning ordinance on ground that it was unreasonable, confiscatory, and unconstitutional as applied to his property in that by reason of physical characteristics of such property it could not be used for residential purposes within the limitations imposed by ordinance, triable issue of fact as to whether such property was reasonably adapted for residential

§ 411. Judgment or Decree; Relief Granted

The judgment or decree must conform to the issues and the findings; and the relief granted, which may, in addition to the injunction, include damages suffered prior to the injunction, is a matter for the discretion of the court.

Rules governing the judgment or decree in proceedings for injunctions generally, discussed in Injunctions §§ 211-220, have been applied in actions for injunctions to restrain violations or threatened violations of zoning ordinances or regulations.⁴³ The decree must conform to the issues, as made by the pleadings and proof,⁴⁴ and similarly, the decree use precluded summary judgment for defendant, in view of provision in ordinance for granting a variance as to such of the restrictions applicable to zone as would otherwise prevent such use.

N.Y.—Town of Cortlandt v. McNally, 126 N.Y.S.2d 702, 282 App.Div. 1072, appeal denied 128 N.Y.S.2d 597, 283 App.Div. 800.

Motion to open judgment after term

Where court of common pleas, after trial, entered judgment enjoining owners of realty from using their realty in violation of zoning regulations of city, and after term of court during which judgment was rendered, owners of realty moved to open the judgment, claiming that zoning commission was illegally constituted and that regulations were not valid and legal, court of common pleas did not have power to grant the motion and did not err in denying motion.

Conn.—Poneleit v. Dudas, 106 A.2d 479, 141 Conn. 413.

Correction of judgment by amendment

Where city zoning ordinance prohibited construction of a building closer to side property line than three feet, enjoining construction of a house nearer than five and one-half feet to side property line was error and judgment should be amended so as to conform to restriction imposed by ordinance.

La.—Rabalais v. Hillary Builders, App., 62 So.2d 846.

44. Ill.—Winnebago County v. Harrington, 68 N.E.2d 619, 329 Ill.App. 344.

Matters not in issue

(1) In action to enjoin operation of trailer coach park in alleged violation of county zoning ordinance, wherein plan commission prevailed on permanent injunction issue, all else in finding and judgment was surplusage and would be disregarded, with exception of costs, which followed judgment as matter of law.

Ind.—Tomlinson v. Marion County Plan Commission, 122 N.E.2d 852, 234 Ind. 88.

must conform to the findings;⁴⁵ and it should provide for such relief as, in view of the facts, circumstances, and situation in the particular case, is warranted.⁴⁶ Whether or not the private citizens who joined with the municipality in the suit to enjoin the zoning violation were entitled to relief does not affect the city's right to relief.⁴⁷

Damages. In a proper case, the relief granted in an action for an injunction to restrain violations of zoning regulations may include damages incurred prior to the granting of the injunctive relief.⁴⁸

Restoration of conditions; removal of buildings. Where defendant has fully completed the zoning violation sought to be restrained, after the filing of the bill but before the issuance of any order or decree, the court has power to compel by mandatory injunction the restoration of the former condition of things,⁴⁹ as by ordering the removal or demolition of offending buildings or structures.⁵⁰ On the other hand, a court has refused a mandatory injunction to require the removal of certain structures, the court preferring to leave to the officials of the local building department the ordinary and customary means of compelling the removal of condemned and illegal buildings.⁵¹ So also, where a building which is to be used in violation of the zoning law may also possibly be used in conformity with the law it is inequitable to require it to be dismantled.⁵²

§ 412. — Preliminary Injunction

A preliminary, temporary, or interlocutory injunction, until final determination is made, may be granted in the discretion of the court on motion therefor made before trial.

A preliminary, temporary, or interlocutory injunction, until final determination is made, may be granted in a proper case on motion therefor made before trial.⁵³ The question whether such an injunction should be granted is generally discretionary;⁵⁴ but in some circumstances there is no room

(2) In suit to enjoin construction of filling station in residential subdivision, where pleadings did not put in issue any question with respect to southwest corner of certain block, conclusion, implicit in decree enjoining construction of filling station on southeast corner but not southwest corner, that southwest corner was only corner on which station could be built without harm was only valuable as finding of fact and had no other force.

48. N.J.—Garrou v. Teaneck Tryon Co., 94 A.2d 332, 11 N.J. 294.

Incident of exercise of equitable jurisdiction

Any damage which has been incurred prior to granting of injunctive relief in suit to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance can readily be determined by trial court, as incident to exercise of its equitable jurisdiction and without impairment of any constitutional right to trial by jury.

N.J.—Garrou v. Teaneck Tryon Co., supra.

No damages suffered yet; reference denied

Where defendants violated zoning ordinance by starting construction of race track on realty zoned for residences, but adjacent property owners had not as yet suffered any actual positive damages, reference of issue of damages would be denied.

51. N.Y.—Longo v. Eilers, 93 N.Y.S. 2d 517, 196 Misc. 909.

52. Warehouse

Where construction by partners of warehouse to be used in their business was an unlawful extension of a nonconforming use in violation of county zoning ordinance, because partners proposed to use the warehouse in connection with their business, but it was possible that warehouse could be used for a conforming use under the ordinance, it was inequitable to require partners to dismantle partially constructed warehouse, even though partners proceeded with construction of warehouse after notice that construction of warehouse was an unlawful extension of a nonconforming use.

54. Tex.—Weaver v. Van Wagner, Civ.App., 259 S.W.2d 348.

(1) Where use appeared to be a mere continuation by property owner of residential use of his property. Tex.—Weaver v. Van Wagner, supra.

(2) Where defendant agreed to maintain the status quo. Md.—Kahl v. Consolidated Gas, Elec. Light & Power Co. of Baltimore, 57 A.2d 331, 189 Md. 655.

Grant held not abuse of discretion

(1) In general. Tex.—Parrino v. Dubois, Civ.App., 220 S.W.2d 305, refused no reversible error.

(2) In suit on behalf of city to enjoin landowner from using part of land as a lumber yard in alleged violation of zoning ordinance, granting preliminary injunction against such use was not an abuse of discretion, but landowner should be allowed to sell lumber remaining on premises in regular course of business pending trial, without replacing it with other lumber.

R.I.—Miller v. Tanenbaum, 200 A. 449, 61 R.I. 92.

(3) In suit to enjoin city from erecting fire station on property owned by city in area zoned for other purposes on ground that city had abused discretion in selecting site and that land had already been dedicated for park purposes, granting of temporary injunction was within discretion of trial court where evidence was conflicting.

Ga.—Mayor, etc., of Savannah v. Collins, 84 S.E.2d 454, 211 Ga. 191.

for the exercise of judicial discretion and plaintiff may be entitled to such relief as a matter of right.⁵⁵ In determining whether a temporary injunction should be granted, if the relief sought by way of a temporary injunction is the same as may ultimately be obtained after trial, the temporary restraint will be granted with great caution and only where necessity requires it.⁵⁶

Duration of temporary injunction. A temporary injunction generally continues in effect until it is dissolved or until a hearing is had on it.⁵⁷ Thus, in the absence of a hearing thereon, the language of the trial judge continuing in effect a temporary restraining order previously granted has no effect on the previous order and does not supersede it.⁵⁸

§ 413. Costs and Fees

Under a permissive statute a successful plaintiff in a suit to enjoin the violation of a zoning ordinance may recover an attorney's fee as costs.

Rules governing the allowance of costs and fees

Residents entitled to interlocutory injunction

Residents of area zoned for operation of filling stations conducted wholly within a building except for off-street loading and delivery vehicles which are incidental thereto were entitled to interlocutory injunction restraining erection of filling station which was to be conducted largely outside building.

Ga.—Atlantic Refining Co. v. Spears, 89 S.E.2d 177, 211 Ga. 787.

55. La.—City of New Orleans v. Leeco, 53 So.2d 490, 219 La. 550.

Refusal held error

In proceeding to enjoin use of residential property for automobile repair garage in violation of zoning ordinance, where undisputed evidence showed that defendant was thus violating the ordinance, trial court erred to prejudice of municipality in denying its application for temporary injunction.

Tex.—City of Waco v. Marstaller, Civ.App., 271 S.W.2d 722.

56. No showing of irreparable injury

In action by villages to restrain town from constructing public beaches within village areas zoned for residential purposes only wherein villages attacked statute authorizing towns to construct such beaches as unconstitutional because it permits towns to construct beaches in violation of zoning ordinances, villages failed to make necessary showing on motion for temporary injunction pending trial, that immediate establishment of beaches would be destructive of their rights or cause material and irreparable injury, and therefore motion was denied.

N.Y.—Incorporated Village of Lloyd Harbor v. Town of Huntington, 143 N.Y.S.2d 797.

57. Ga.—Parker & Co. v. Village of North Atlanta, 91 S.E.2d 355, 212 Ga. 177.

59. N.Y.—Solof v. Heitner, 123 N.Y.S.2d 365, 282 App.Div. 738.

Costs denied

In action for removal of that part of defendants' garage, which was erected within area restricted by covenants and building zone ordinance of town, and for damages, wherein judgment was rendered in favor of defendants dismissing complaint on ground that violations were insignificant, that damage sustained was too trivial for relief, and that plaintiffs were guilty of laches, defendants should not have been awarded costs.

N.Y.—Solof v. Heitner, supra.

60. Statute held valid

Statute providing that successful plaintiff in a suit to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance may recover attorney's fee as costs is not violative of constitutional provision prohibiting creation of special privileges and immunities.

Ill.—Pasfield v. Donovan, 181 N.E.2d 504, 7 Ill.2d 563.

61. Ill.—Pasfield v. Donovan, supra.

62. Wash.—Park v. Stolzheise, 167 P.2d 412, 24 Wash.2d 781.

Costs and attorney's fees allowed

Intervenors, as owners of neighboring property, had vital interest in action to enjoin defendant's use of his property as sanitarium for mental cases in violation of county zoning resolution and were entitled to intervene in the action and, hence, intervenors should be allowed their costs for filing their complaints in intervention and their statutory attorney's fees.

Wash.—Park v. Stolzheise, supra.

Witness fees to intervenors disallowed

Intervenors, as litigants, were not entitled to have taxed as part of costs fees to intervenors as witnesses.

Wash.—Park v. Stolzheise, supra.

Pa.—Appeal of Estock's Zoning, Com. Pl., 53 Lanc.Rev. 203.

Question not raised in lower court

Where action to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance was tried at all times as if a certain ordinance were applicable, property owners could not raise, for first time in motion for rehearing before reviewing court, contention that the ordinance in question was not applicable.

Tex.—Newton v. Town of Highland Park, Civ.App., 282 S.W.2d 266, error refused no reversible error.

Error not objected to in lower court

In suit by city to enjoin violation of zoning ordinance, where zone location of property was not in dispute and introduction of ordinance was not objected to on the ground that boundaries of the districts zoned did not appear from the ordinance but only by reference to map which was referred to therein but was not introduced, alleged error in admission of on appeal.⁶⁴ The review proceeding must be brought in the appellate court having jurisdiction over the case.⁶⁵ In some states, where the proceedings do not properly involve or raise a constitutional question the supreme court does not have jurisdiction of a direct appeal.⁶⁶

§ 416. Violation of Injunction; Punishment

The violation of an injunction to prevent a zoning violation may be punishable as a contempt of court.

The violation of an injunction or restraining order to prevent the violation of a zoning ordinance or regulation may be punishable as a contempt of court;⁶⁷ and the punishment for the violation may be determined on a motion to punish for contempt.⁶⁸

§ 416. Liability for Securing Wrongful Issuance of Injunction

The fact that a municipality or other governmental entity securing the issuance of an injunction against a zoning violation does so wrongfully does not render it liable in damages to the party restrained; nor is there any liability where the defendant had been negligent.

While it is a general rule in injunction suits that ordinance could not be predicated on that ground.

Ala.—Walls v. City of Gunterville, 45 So.2d 468, 253 Ala. 480.

Future grant of variance not convincing

In suit to enjoin defendants' use of coach house as residence in violation of zoning ordinance of city, where appellate court found plaintiffs entitled to relief sought, but defendants contended that their violation of ordinance should be overlooked because variance would be granted by board of adjustment anyhow if defendant took correct procedural steps to obtain it, record failed to convince appellate court that defendants could persuade board to reconsider its decision denying such variance to defendants' predecessor in title and grant variance to defendants.

Pa.—Phillips v. Griffiths, 77 A.2d 375, 366 Pa. 468.

Evidence not reported

Evidence not having been reported, there was no adequate basis for testing trial judge's conclusion that new bin was not a "structure" within prohibition of zoning bylaw forbidding replacement of nonconforming buildings without a permit, and his decree would be affirmed.

Mich.—Wolff v. Steiner, supra.

Grant of injunction sustained

(1) Where construction of filling station as and where complainant proposed would constitute a nuisance, that ordinance prohibiting erection of filling stations in area was repealed would not entitle him to erect station, and did not authorize review of injunction on ground of newly discovered evidence.

(2) Where city was granted injunction restraining church member from conducting services in private residence district from which churches were excluded without use permit by zoning ordinance, and where church member failed to exhaust his administrative remedy by applying to city for use permit, injunction restraining member from conducting church services in zoned district would be affirmed.

Cal.—City of Chico v. First Ave. Baptist Church of Chico, 238 P.2d 587, 108 C.A.2d 297.

Indefinite record; partial affirmance

Where trailer park of plaintiffs not obtaining consent of adjoining property owners was located partly in commercial zone and partly in multiple building zone, and ordinance required no consent of adjoining property owners for park in commercial zone if park conformed to certain requirements but did require consent for park in multiple building zone, and decree appealed from enjoined operation of park without regard to different zones, and record was too indefinite to permit supreme court to determine if park conformed with requirement for a park in commercial zone, supreme court would affirm decree as far as it applied to multiple building zone but would remand with respect to commercial zone.

City held not political subdivision of state

City of St. Louis, as a city, was not a "political subdivision" of state, so as to give supreme court jurisdiction of appeal in city's action to enjoin property owner from using his realty in a manner in violation of city's zoning ordinance.

68. Motion adjourned

On motion of town to punish persons for contempt of final judgment invalidating building permit and certificate of occupancy and enjoining use of building until it conformed to ordinance, wherein a defense was that defendants had unsuccessfully petitioned town board for interpretation of ordinance, even though defendants had committed several infractions of building ordinance, in view of fact that a finding that they had willfully neglected to comply would substantially destroy their property and in view of fact that they had petitioned board, court would adjourn motion for thirty days to afford town board opportunity to weigh matter.

N.Y.—Town of Greenburgh v. Buser, 148 N.Y.S.2d 550, 4 Misc.2d 513.

persons who have been wrongfully enjoined and have, in consequence, suffered loss may claim and recover damages in certain circumstances, as discussed in Injunctions §§ 278-316, the fact that a municipality or other governmental entity securing the issuance of an injunction to restrain construction on the ground that it was in violation of a zoning ordinance does so wrongfully does not render it liable in damages to the party restrained,⁶⁹ and damages cannot be so recovered where defendant had been negligent or did not exercise due diligence.⁷⁰

C. OFFENSES AND PENALTIES

§ 417. In General

Under some statutes or ordinances the violation of a zoning regulation may constitute an offense for which an action for a penalty may be prosecuted, and the power of municipalities to enact such ordinances depends on their statutory authorization. Whether the proceeding to recover a penalty is civil or criminal depends on the particular statute involved.

Under various statutes or ordinances so providing, the violation of a zoning regulation may constitute an offense for which an action for a penalty may be prosecuted.⁷¹ However, in the absence of statutes so providing, there is no mandatory duty imposed on a municipality to prosecute for alleged violation of its zoning ordinances,⁷² and no liability is imposed on a municipality for failure to do so.⁷³

69. Ill.—Lake County v. Cuneo, 100 N.E.2d 521, 344 Ill.App. 242.

Affirmative wrong

Fact that wrong committed by county in wrongfully issuing injunction restraining builder's construction was affirmative in character, rather than mere failure to observe a duty, made no difference in testing liability of county.

Ill.—Lake County v. Cuneo, supra.

70. Reimbursement for construction denied

Surrounding property owners suing to restrain defendant from building a filling station on town lot on ground that it would create a nuisance were not required to reimburse defendant for money spent on construction up to time injunction was issued, where trial court found that defendant and oil company's representatives who were working with him did not exercise diligence that would be expected of experienced businessmen.

N.Y.—People v. Gold, 6 N.Y.S.2d 264.

Particular violations held subject to prosecution

(1) Defendant was properly convicted for constructing wooden structure within fire limits of city in violation of ordinance.

Ill.—City of Chicago v. Bernstein, 86 N.E.2d 286, 337 Ill.App. 649.

(2) Municipal zoning ordinance permitting only specified uses in business district, including that of public garage for purposes of auto repair and warehousing, under certain limitations, did not authorize the operation in such district of a transfer depot and truck terminal, and operation of truck terminal therein warranted conviction for violation of ordinance.

N.J.—Borough of West Caldwell v. Zell, 91 A.2d 763, 22 N.J.Super. 188.

(3) Landowner, who was granted permit to build greenhouse in residential area pursuant to exception in zoning ordinance which limited height of smokestack built in conjunction with such greenhouse to forty feet, and who, believing that a fifty-foot stack would be necessary for his operation, did not apply to local board of adjustment for variance or amendment to ordinance but instead proceeded to build fifty-foot stack, was properly convicted of violation of the ordinance.

N.J.—Pequannock Tp. v. De Wilde, 91 A.2d 410, 21 N.J.Super. 517.

N.Y.—People v. Hein, 65 N.Y.S.2d 318, 187 Misc. 6.

Pa.—Commonwealth v. Cieslak, 115 A.2d 418, 179 Pa.Super. 441.

Commonwealth v. Jekyll, Quar. Sess., 71 Montg.Co. 5—Commonwealth v. Reitz, Quar.Sess., 25 Northumb.Leg.J. 212.

Responsibility of trustee

In prosecution for violation of municipal zoning ordinance, where the deed lodged the title to land in defendant individually, and application for permission to proceed under the zoning ordinance was made by defendant individually, defendant individually was responsible to the law for infractions by him of zoning ordinance, even though his relationship to the title was only that of trustee.

N.J.—Town of Montclair v. Stanoyevich, 79 A.2d 288, 6 N.J. 479.

Prosecution held unwarranted

(1) Where addition to an existing building had long since been erected pursuant to a building permit issued by the building inspector and was presently occupied and used by the petitioner in the conduct of its business, and controversy with respect to revocation of the building permit appeared to have resulted more from laxity by the board of appeals than from any transgression of the petitioner, prosecution of criminal proceedings for alleged violations of a building zone ordinance were unwarranted.

N.Y.—Capitol Distributors Corp. v. Jones, 148 N.Y.S.2d 382, 2 Misc.2d 816.

(2) Defendant who took into his home each week-day morning a number of preschool age children for supervised play either within or without the house, depending on the weather, was operating a "school" within meaning of village zoning ordinance which permitted schools within a residence A zone.

N.Y.—People v. Collins, 83 N.Y.S.2d 124, 191 Misc. 553.

(3) Where a city ordinance requires that a property owner, on due notice by the city building inspector, must repair or demolish a building found to be unsafe by the inspector, and further provides for the imposition of a fine by a magistrate for failure to obey such notice, a property owner will not be required to pay such fine if he fails to comply with a notice which orders demolition of the building but does not give him the alternative of making necessary repairs.

72. N.J.—Lanni v. City of Bayonne, 72 A.2d 397, 7 N.J.Super. 169.

73. Liability to person who prosecuted case

Municipality, which had received and accepted a fine paid on conviction of violation of its zoning ordinance, was not liable on quasi contract to person who, claiming to be aggrieved by such violation, had successfully conducted the prosecution therefor after his demand made on

Criminal liability of landlords. It has been held that a landlord is not subject to criminal liability for maintaining the use of the premises in a manner forbidden by the zoning laws where he has sought and been unable to terminate the use by evicting the tenants;⁷⁴ but a contrary result has been reached where the lease was specifically for the forbidden use.⁷⁵

Power to impose, and validity of, penalties. To the extent authorized by the legislature, a municipality may enact ordinances and provide against their violation by penalties;⁷⁶ but where the legislature has directed the manner in which ordinances are to be enforced or the penalty to be imposed for their violation, it thereby negatives the right of the municipality to provide for any other penalty.⁷⁷ Accordingly, penalties provided in a zoning ordinance are valid and can be applied only to the extent that they do not exceed the penalties provided by the statute.⁷⁸

Use of unapproved plan. Under a statute so providing, it is a punishable offense for an owner of land to sell, transfer, or agree to sell any land by reference to, or exhibition of, or by other use of a plan of a subdivision, before it has been approved by the planning commission.⁷⁹

Character and form of proceedings. While under some statutes the proceeding to recover a penalty for the violation of a zoning ordinance is a civil suit, and not a criminal prosecution,⁸⁰ under other statutes such a proceeding is a criminal one and not governed by rules applicable in civil cases.⁸¹

Determination of validity of regulation. Where a remedy for determining the validity of a zoning regulation is provided by the zoning acts, the question of its validity cannot be determined in a prosecution for the violation of the zoning ordinance.⁸² The court is not required to determine the question of the validity of a provision which has no application to the case in issue.⁸³

Nature and extent of punishment. The nature and extent of punishment for violation of zoning laws depend on the provisions of the ordinances, statutes, and constitutional provisions.⁸⁴

§ 418. Defenses

Various defenses are available in criminal actions for violation of a zoning regulation, provided the accused is not precluded from asserting a defense. Prior failure to enforce the regulation, and the employment of a civil remedy to enforce it, are not defenses against prosecution.

Various defenses may be available in criminal actions for the violation of a zoning regulation,⁸⁵ municipality for prosecution by it had been refused, since no statute imposed on municipality a mandatory duty to prosecute for violation of zoning ordinance or any liability for failure to do so.

N.J.—City of Newark v. Pulverman, 95 A.2d 889, 12 N.J. 105.

Nature of punishment or indictability immaterial

Procedurally and within the intendment of the rule providing for appeals from judgment of conviction in the inferior courts of limited jurisdiction to county court, a prosecution for the violation of an ordinance is essentially criminal in nature irrespective of whether the penal section of the ordinance provides for a fine only or for both fine and imprisonment and even though such violation does not constitute an indictable offense.

85. N.J.—Sea Isle City v. Vinci, 112 A.2d 18, 34 N.J.Super. 273.

Matters held defenses

Under city ordinance providing no person shall erect or construct any building without first obtaining permit from building inspector, municipality could not delegate authority to building inspector arbitrarily to fix life of building permit, and accused, who apparently did not com-including the defense that the regulation being enforced is invalid,⁸⁶ except where the circumstances are such that accused is precluded from asserting the defense by waiver or estoppel.⁸⁷

Prior failure to enforce regulation. It is no defense to a prosecution for the violation of a zoning ordinance that the authorities had failed to enforce the ordinance in the past and that other persons have been permitted to violate it without prosecution or punishment;⁸⁸ and the fact that the municipal or zoning officials knew or permitted past violations by accused or others will not estop the municipality or the zoning authority subsequently to enforce the regulation.⁸⁹

Employment of civil remedy. The fact that a civil remedy, such as injunction, was employed for the enforcement of the zoning regulation does not afford absolution from any criminal responsibility there may be.⁹⁰

§ 419. Pleadings

While a complaint may not be necessary in the prosecution of a zoning violation before a police magistrate or justice of the peace, in proceedings before other tribunals the indictment, information, or other pleading must sufficiently state the elements of the accusation and contain all essential facts.

While a complaint may not be necessary to the prosecution of a suit before a police magistrate or justice of the peace for violation of a zoning ordinance,⁹¹ in proceedings before other tribunals the indictment, information, or other pleading charging the offense must sufficiently state the essential elements of the accusation and contain all essential facts.⁹² However, it need not contain matters of proof;⁹³ nor need it anticipate or negative a possible defense.⁹⁴

plete construction of garage within time fixed by building inspector in building permit, was not guilty of violating ordinance.

N.J.—Sea Isle City v. Vinci, supra.

Matters held not defenses

(1) Existence of housing shortage did not give accused the legal right to furnish lodging for more than four persons in a private residence in violation of the zoning ordinance. Mo.—Kansas City v. Wilhoit, App., 237 S.W.2d 919.

(2) Where accused neither owned nor leased premises, but apparently occupied them solely through sufferance, and had erected no buildings on the premises in which he conducted a junk yard, the fact that he had been annually granted a license to operate the junk yard by the municipal license inspector constituted no defense to prosecution for operating junk yard contrary to zoning ordinance.

N.J.—State v. Yaccarino, 70 A.2d 84, 3 N.J. 291.

(3) Where construction of garage violated provisions of zoning ordinance fixing side yard distances, accused was guilty of violating ordinance notwithstanding fact that he had submitted drawings and locations of proposed garage, for which building inspector had issued a building permit and that he had expended money in construction thereof.

N.J.—Sea Isle City v. Vinci, 112 A.2d 18, 34 N.J.Super. 273.

(4) City was not precluded from prosecuting landowners for beginning construction of building without first securing zoning permit required by city ordinance by fact that landowners were delayed in proceeding with construction until after enactment of zoning ordinance, in absence of any showing that city was in collusion with landowners' neighbors in prosecuting injunction suits which caused delay or that city deliberately attempted to delay issuance of building permit until new ordinance could be enacted.

87. Md.—Laque v. State, supra.

Accused held not estopped

Accused who applied to the board of zoning appeals for a variation from a zoning ordinance as a nonconforming use was not estopped to contend, when action against him was brought by city for violation of the ordinance, that the present use was permissible as nonconforming.

Ill.—City of Chicago v. Krema Trucking Co., 86 N.E.2d 431, 337 Ill. 662.

Failure sooner to litigate question

Where accused attempted to secure from board of appeals a special exception permit under county zoning ordinance to operate a junk yard, but his application was denied and he made no attempt to take an appeal from that adverse decision, he was not entitled to attack validity of provision of ordinance dealing with special exceptions in prosecutions for violating the zoning ordinance by operating a junk yard or salvage yard without a special exception permit.

Md.—Laque v. State, 113 A.2d 893, 207 Md. 242, certiorari denied 76 S.Ct. 105, 350 U.S. 863, 100 L.Ed. 765.

89. Filing registration blank showing violation

Fact that when purchaser bought property in single-family dwelling district, purchaser received rooming house registration blank from city, filled it out, and filed it setting forth number of roomers in excess of those permitted by zoning restrictions did not estop city subsequently to enforce ordinance.

94. Accused not within exception

Indictment charging accused with violating zoning regulation was not insufficient because it failed to allege that accused did not come within exception contained in regulation.

Ga.—Flynn v. State, supra.

Plea of not guilty to a charge of violating a zoning ordinance denies all material allegations in the warrant or complaint and imposes on the municipality the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt every essential fact necessary to establish guilt.⁹⁵

§ 420. Evidence

The municipality has the burden of proving a violation by accused of the zoning regulation and every other element essential to establish guilt, and accused has the burden of establishing matters of defense. In some cases the prosecution is required to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

In a prosecution for the violation of a zoning ordinance, the municipality has the burden of proving a violation by accused of the zoning regulation,⁹⁶ and every other element essential to establish guilt;⁹⁷ and accused has the burden of establishing matters of defense to the charges.⁹⁸

The zoning ordinance violated must be introduced in evidence, since the court cannot take judicial notice of city ordinances.⁹⁹

Admissibility and sufficiency. Rules governing such questions in proceedings to enforce ordinances generally, discussed in Municipal Corporations § 341, have been applied, in actions to enforce and punish the violation of zoning ordinances, to questions relating to the admissibility¹ and sufficiency² of evidence.

95. Va.—Washington & Old Dominion R. R. v. City of Alexandria, 60 S.E.2d 40, 191 Va. 184.

96. Exception

97. Va.—Washington & Old Dominion R. R. v. City of Alexandria, 60 S.E.2d 40, 191 Va. 184.

Matter not required to be proved

In prosecution under ordinance prohibiting maintenance of junk yard within borough limits, wherein the validity or reasonableness of the ordinance was not questioned, the only proof necessary was the existence of the junk yard maintained by accused, and the prosecution was not required to show that the junk yard was a nuisance in fact or per se, notwithstanding the ordinance declared the maintenance of a junk yard within borough limits to be a public nuisance.

Pa.—Commonwealth v. Baker, 53 A.2d 829, 160 Pa.Super. 640.

98. Nonconforming use and continuance thereof

In prosecution for violation of a zoning ordinance, where provision that a nonconforming use existing at the time of the passage of the ordinance might be continued was not a part of the enacting clause of the zoning ordinance or part of the description of the offense involved, and provision appeared in a separate section of the ordinance, accused had the burden of proving the nonconforming use of his property and a continuance of such use until the dates of the alleged violations.

Mo.—Kansas City v. Wilhoit, App., 287 S.W.2d 919.

99. Mo.—Kansas City v. McLendon, App., 197 S.W.2d 713.

Violation not open to consideration

Where there was no ordinance or section of ordinance in record prohibiting use of a building in particular zone for more than one family, court, in prosecution for zoning violation, could not consider any evidence tending to prove violation of such omitted ordinance or section.

Mo.—Kansas City v. McLendon, supra.

N.Y.—People v. Gold, 6 N.Y.S.2d 264.

1. Evidence held inadmissible

(1) In prosecution for violation of a zoning ordinance by use of a residence for furnishing lodging or boarding for more than four persons, evidence of a housing shortage in the city and request of city authorities to house owners to alleviate the shortage was inadmissible since such was not a defense.

Mo.—Kansas City v. Wilhoit, App., 237 S.W.2d 919.

(2) In prosecution for violation of ordinance regulating size, number of buildings, and position thereof on rear lots and of ordinance prohibiting conversion of buildings for use by more than one family, evidence of violations of ordinances by others was properly excluded, as was also evidence that the mayor and commissioners had orally approved the conversion of buildings.

N.J.—State v. Giller, 68 A.2d 489, 5 N.J.Super. 130.

Matter held irrelevant

In prosecution for violation of village zoning ordinance which permitted maintenance of schools in zone, failure of defendant to register his institution for training and care of preschool age children under terms of Education Law was irrelevant to a determination of whether institution was a school within meaning of ordinance.

N.Y.—People v. Collins, 83 N.Y.S.2d 124, 191 Misc. 553.

2. Evidence held sufficient

(1) To show that removal of coal from commercial district constituted mining operations prohibited by zoning ordinance and not merely the reclamation of land for housing development.

Pa.—Commonwealth v. De Baldo, 82 A.2d 578, 169 Pa.Super. 363.

(2) To establish proof of ownership by accused as of the critical date, where deed to him of the premises was put in evidence, which deed was dated and recorded several years before the violation, thereby establishing presumption of continuance of ownership.

N.Y.—People v. Scandore, 148 N.E.2d 872, 3 N.Y.2d 681, 171 N.Y.S.2d 808.

Evidence held to sustain conviction

(1) For violating a zoning ordinance, in that accused was carrying on a business in a residential area.

N.Y.—City of New Rochelle, on Complaint of Dassler, v. Dandry, 79 N.Y.S.2d 126, 191 Misc. 977—City of New Rochelle, on Complaint of Dassler, v. Friedman, 78 N.Y.S.2d 681, 190 Misc. 654.

(2) For violation of zoning ordinance by operation of prohibited junk yards.

N.J.—State v. Yaccarino, 70 A.2d 84, 3 N.J. 291.

(3) For allowing use of premises as dumping ground in violation of zoning ordinance in that such use constituted expansion of original nonconforming use permitted under ordinance.

Ill.—People v. Triem Steel & Processing, Inc., 125 N.E.2d 678, 5 Ill. App.2d 371.

Evidence held insufficient

To establish the defense of a nonconforming use existing lawfully at the time of the passage of the zoning ordinance.

Mo.—Kansas City v. Wilhoit, App., 237 S.W.2d 919.

N.Y.—City of New Rochelle, on Complaint of Dassler, v. Dandry, 79 N.Y.S.2d 126, 191 Misc. 977—People v. Hein, 65 N.Y.S.2d 318, 187 Misc. 6.

The prosecution has been required to establish the case against accused by proof beyond a reasonable doubt.³ So, in a criminal proceeding under a statute making it a punishable offense for an owner of land to sell, transfer, or agree to sell any land by reference to, or exhibition of, or by other use of a plan of a subdivision, before it has been approved by the planning commission, a valid conviction must be supported by proof of the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt.⁴

§ 421. Judgment

General rules govern the requisites and sufficiency, and operation and effect, of judgments in actions for penalties for violation of zoning ordinances or regulations.

The requisites and sufficiency,⁵ and operation and effect,⁶ of judgments in actions for penalties for violation of zoning ordinances or regulations are governed by rules applicable to judgments in actions to enforce ordinances generally, discussed in Municipal Corporations §§ 351-360.

Evidence held to justify acquittal

(1) In prosecution of owner of building for alleged violation of city zoning ordinance in permitting operation of tailor shop in residence district, wherein accused set up defense of a nonconforming use in existence at time of adoption of ordinance, evidence was held insufficient to establish any violation of ordinance with respect to tailor shop. N.Y.—People v. Sudier Realty Corp., 101 N.Y.S.2d 792.

(2) In prosecution for unlawfully and willfully altering and enlarging a dwelling for use other than as a one-family dwelling in violation of zoning ordinance, evidence justified acquittal. Mo.—Kansas City v. McLendon, App., 197 S.W.2d 713.

3. Va.—Washington & Old Dominion R. R. v. City of Alexandria, 60 S.E.2d 40, 191 Va. 184.

5. Ohio.—City of Columbus v. Baldasaro, App., 123 N.E.2d 290.

Conformity to evidence and issues

(1) Judgment finding accused guilty of a violation of zoning ordinance by operating manufacturing plant in residential district was not open to attack on ground that it was not responsive to the evidence, where question to be determined was whether the nonconforming use was lawful under a prior ordinance and, on finding that it was not lawful, the court could find a violation of the later ordinance.

Ill.—City of Chicago v. Reuter Bros.

(2) In prosecution for use of dwelling as rooming house without permit, in violation of city ordinance, finding of guilt was contrary to evidence.

Ohio.—City of Columbus v. Baldasaro, App., 123 N.E.2d 290.

Status of judge

Under constitutional provision, court rule, and the evidence, criminal court judgment finding accused guilty of violating zoning ordinance was not void on ground that judge was not a judge of the criminal court on date of judgment.

Ill.—Village of Riverside v. Kuhne, 82 N.E.2d 500, 335 Ill.App. 547.

Res judicata

(1) Judgment of not guilty in suit against an individual for violation of zoning ordinance in use of a vacant lot was not res judicata nor did it constitute estoppel by verdict in a subsequent quasi-criminal action for the same violation against a corporation in which the individual defendant was the larger stockholder, where the individual was sued personally and the corporation was not legally involved.

Ill.—City of Chicago v. Krema Trucking Co., supra.

(2) Judgment of conviction of plaintiff for violation of zoning ordi-

The effect, in a civil proceeding for an injunction, of the determination in a criminal proceeding for the violation of a zoning ordinance is discussed supra § 400.

§ 422. Review

While under some statutes the review of a prosecution for a zoning violation is by trial de novo, the review proceedings ordinarily are governed by the general rules.

Rules governing review procedure in actions to enforce ordinances and regulations generally, discussed in Municipal Corporations §§ 361-379, have been applied in proceedings to review prosecutions for violations of zoning ordinances and regulations;⁷ and the applicable rules and statutes in force at the time of the entry of the judgment of conviction and the filing of the notice of appeal are controlling.⁸

The appellate court cannot, or will not, ordinarily review questions not raised in the lower court,⁹ or matters not in issue in the case.¹⁰ However, the nance was only prima facie evidence of facts involved, in action against city and officials for judgment recognizing use of premises as proper. N.Y.—Marshak v. City of Long Beach, 81 N.Y.S.2d 74, 195 Misc. 125, affirmed 105 N.Y.S.2d 983, 278 App.Div. 966.

Review of evidence

In reviewing a conviction approved by trial court of violating a city zoning ordinance, the evidence must be viewed in light most favorable to city.

10. Nonconforming use

Person convicted of using property in residential zone for purpose not permitted in such zone by ordinance, which purpose did not constitute a pre-existing nonconforming use per-

appellate court may consider a question not raised below, where it deems the issue one of important public concern,¹¹ and may even do so sua sponte, where the question was not raised in the briefs on the appeal.¹² The zoning ordinance must be preserved in the transcript, since the appellate court cannot take judicial notice of city ordinances.¹³

On appeal from a conviction for violation of a zoning ordinance, the court will not review a determination of the city's board of appeals refusing a permit for a use which constitutes a violation, or determine whether the ordinance has been administered in a manner so unreasonable that enforcement would constitute an unlawful taking of accused's property.¹⁴

Trial de novo on appeal. Under some statutes the review on appeal is by trial de novo.¹⁵

ZYGOMA. The bone that leads across in front of the ear.³

ZYGOTE. The fertilized human ovum. It is a one-celled individual, and it contains all the potentialities of the new individual who is to develop from it.⁴

mitted under ordinance, and of using property without obtaining required certificate could not complain that he was not convicted of a violation of a nonconforming use.

N.J.—Rupprecht v. Draney, 61 A.2d 220, 137 N.J.Law 564, affirmed 64 A.2d 66, 1 N.J. 407.

11. N.J.—State v. Laurel Mills Sewerage Corp., 134 A.2d 720, 46 N.J. Super. 331.

Validity of penalty provision

Point whether penalty provision of zoning ordinance was invalid as exceeding statutory authority for imposition of fines and penalties for violation of municipal ordinance was of sufficient public concern to permit the superior court, appellate division, to consider the question sua sponte even though the question was not raised before the magistrate or before the county court or in original briefs on appeal from judgment of conviction for violation of zoning ordinance.

N.J.—State v. Laurel Mills Sewerage Corp., supra.

15. N.J.—City of Newark v. Pulverman, 95 A.2d 889, 12 N.J. 105.

Pa.—Commonwealth v. De Baldo, 82 A.2d 573, 169 Pa.Super. 363.

Appellate judgment as controlling; subsequent review

(1) Where accused, convicted in municipal court of violating zoning ordinance, appealed to county court and was therein found not guilty after a trial de novo, judgment of county court constituted an acquittal and nullified original judgment in municipal court.

N.J.—City of Newark v. Pulverman, 95 A.2d 889, 12 N.J. 105.

(2) Trial de novo in county court of undertaker, accused of violating zoning ordinance in conducting funeral business in private residence located in area zoned residential, nullified judgment of municipal court, and, on appeal to superior court from conviction in county court, judgment under review was that of county court.

N.J.—Town of Belleville v. Kiernan, 121 A.2d 411, 39 N.J. Super. 480.

Cure of pleadings on trial de novo

Under rule relating to effect of appeal from municipal court and trial de novo in county court, the mere taking of the appeal by accused from the conviction in municipal court does not have effect of curing deficiency in complaint; effect of appeal would be only to confer consent on county court to amend complaint to cure deficiency.

N.J.—Town of Belleville v. Kiernan, supra.

Trial without jury

Where accused was found guilty of violation of a municipal zoning ordinance and he appealed to the county court and made a demand for trial by jury, case was properly put to trial de novo before county court without a jury.

N.J.—Town of Montclair v. Stanoyevich, 79 A.2d 288, 6 N.J. 479.

Validity of ordinance considered

Constitutionality of village zoning ordinance could have been raised on appeal by owner of land from conviction by police justice of violation of ordinance, but such conviction was not binding on supreme court in action by owner for a declaratory judgment that zoning ordinance was void as applied to his property.

N.Y.—Fleetwood Manor, Inc. v. Village of Huntington Bay, 115 N.Y. S.2d 615.
